offense by statute.² Being, therefore, a statutory crime, its definition will be found to be as various as the statutes themselves.³ It is broadly defined as "sexual intercourse between parties so nearly related that marriage between them would be unlawful."⁴

II. PROSECUTION OF OFFENSE ITSELF.—A. JOINDER OF PARTIES.—It is not essential that the indictment be against both parties to the incestuous intercourse, but one may be indicted and tried alone,⁵ and especially is this true where the statute does not make the History.—"It is related that in the time of the Commonwealth in England, when the ruling powers found it for their interest to put on the semblance of extraordinary strictness and purity of morals, incest and wilful adultery were made capital crimes, but at the Restoration, when men from the abhorrence of the hypocrisy of the late times fell into a contrary extreme of licentiousness, it was not thought proper to renew the law of such unfashionable rigor; and these offenses have been ever since left to the feeble coercion of the Spiritual Court according to the canon law." State v. Keesler, 78 N. C. 469.

Bishop defines incest as follows: "Incest, where statutes have not modified its meaning, is sexual commerce, either habitual or in a single instance, and either under a form of marriage or without it, between persons too nearly related in consanguinity or affinity to be entitled to intermarry." Bishop, St. Crimes (3d ed.), §727, quoted in the following cases: State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 108, 23 N. E. 747, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790; State v. Nakashima, 62 Wash. 686, 688, 114 Pac. 894.

Distinguished From Other Sexual Crimes.—"The distinguishing fact of this crime, from that of rape, seduction, and adultery is the abhorrent one of the relationship of the parties, making the intercourse unnatural, sickening and deplorable in its consequences, because of which such marriages are prohibited and made a crime." State v. Hurd, 101 Iowa 391, 396, 70 N. W. 391. See also State v. Learned, 73 Kan. 328, 85 Pac. 293; State v. Shear, 51 Wis. 460, 462, 8 N. W. 287.

Under a statute in Indiana (2 G. & H. 452, §45), it was held that "whether crime of incest a joint offense.⁶ It is not even necessary that they be both indicted separately.⁷

B. JOINDER OF OFFENSES. — 1. Generally. — Unless a statute prohibits the charging of two separate offenses in the same indictment,⁸ the crime of rape may be charged in one count of an indictment and the crime of incest in another,⁹ where both counts are based upon a single transaction.¹⁰

2. May Defendant Compel Election. — Where the indictment contains two counts, each charging the commission of distinct acts of incestuous intercourse, the defendant may compel the prosecutor to elect on which count he will proceed.¹¹ So too, while under an indictment so general in its terms as to cover different occasions, the state may prove as a part of its case every act of sexual intercourse between the parties within the period of the statute of limitations, it may be compelled to elect upon which act it will rely as constituting the offense they be prosecuted in the same indictment or not, the crime must be charged as a joint crime. They may be tried separately, and one may be convicted and sentenced before the other is tried. If one be tried and acquitted, the other must be discharged; and, . . . if one be tried, convicted and sentenced, and the other tried and acquitted, this will, ipso facto, render the first conviction void." Baumer v. State, 49 Ind. 544, 19 Am. Rep. 691.

6. Powers v. State, 44 Ga. 209.

7. State v. Learned, 73 Kan. 328, 85 Pac. 293 (wherein an information against particeps criminis was dismissed); Lowther v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. 522.

8. State v. Price, 127 Iowa 301, 103 N. W. 195.

9. Ia.—State v. Price, 127 Iowa 301, 103 N. W. 195. Tex.—Wiggins v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. 538, 84 S. W. 821; Owens v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 345, 33 S. W. 375. Wis.—Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527, 536, 63 N. W. 1061, 48 Am. St. Rep. 954, holding a remark of the court in State v. Shear, 51 Wis. 460, 8 N. W. 287, to the contrary, obiter.

Iowa.—In State v. Thomas, 53 Iowa 214, 4 N. W. 998, it was held by a divided court that rape and incest could not be charged in the same indictment, upon the theory that mutual consent was necessary to the latter offense, and, therefore, the offenses were materially different. But in State v. Hurd, 101 Iowa 391, 70 N. W. 613, the soundness of the argument used in State v. Thomas, supra, was challenged, and it was expressly held that incest was included in the crime of rape, and mutual consent was not an element of the offense, under the statute.

10. Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527, 536, 63 N. W. 1061, 48 Am. St. Rep. 954.

11. State v. Lawrence, 19 Neb. 307, 27 N. W. 126. In this case, the objection to the indictment was, that the date fixed by the first count was not included in the time stated in the second count, and the court said: "It cannot, therefore, be said that these two counts charge the same offense, but in different forms to meet the evidence, which is permissible in criminal practice." (1 Bish. Crim. Proc., §429), but the dates being different, and the first count not being included in the second, as to time, it may be said that each count charges separate and distinct felonies which should not be joined in the same indictment, and for that reason we cannot say the court erred in compelling the election. Especially is this true since it is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court."

Compare Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527, 536, 63 N. W. 1061, 48 Am. St. Rep. 954, wherein a count for rape and a count for incest, based upon the same transaction, were joined, merely to meet the different legal aspects which the evidence might give the case. The court upheld the lower court, which in the exercise of its discretion refused to require an election between the counts.

charged.¹² where, however, the indictment alleges but a single incestuous act, and evidence of other acts of sexual intercourse is given merely in corroboration of the evidence as to the principal offense charged, there can be no election.¹³

C. THE INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION. — 1. Following Statutory Language. — In accordance with the general rule governing indictments or informations for statutory offenses,¹⁴ an indictment charging the offense of incest in the language of the statute defining the offense,¹⁵ or substantially in the language of the statute,¹⁶ or language equivalent thereto is sufficient.¹⁷ Of course if a statutory form of indictment Waiver.—The defendant may waive his right to move for an election on the part of the state. State v. Price, 127 Iowa 301, 307, 103 N. W. 195.

The court must then instruct the jury that evidence of other commissions of the offense can be considered only for the purposes of corroborating the testimony as to the principal offense. Smith v. Com., 109 Ky. 685, 60 S. W. 531.

Method of Making Election.—While it is held that the introduction of evidence tending directly to the proof of one act, and for the purpose of procuring a conviction upon it, constitutes an election of that act as the particular act charged (People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 327), the proper practice, where the defendant desires to have the court require the prosecution to elect of record which of several occurrences testified to by the prosecuting witness the state will rely upon, is to move that the court require an election. David v. People, 204 Ill. 479, 185, 68 N. E. 540. See State v. Pruitt, 202 Mo. 49, 100 S. W. 431, wherein the court said: "It is the duty of the court, at the close of the state's case, on motion of defendant for that purpose, to require the state to elect upon which act it will rely for conviction."¹²

"The court could not, by an instruction, make an election for the prosecuting officer." David v. People, 204 Ill. 479, 488, 68 N. E. 540.

Thus under a statute forbidding cohabitation without marriage, an indictment following the words of the statute, omitting only the words "without marriage" after the word "cohabit," is sufficient. The words "without marriage" used in the statute are not essential, since the word "cohabit" as used in defining the crime of incest, means any sexual intercourse between persons not married. State v. Spurling, 115 La. 789, 40 So. 167.

An indictment setting forth in the words of the statute all the elements of the crime of incest is sufficient, although the offense charged be not designated by that name. State v. Spurling, 115 La. 789, 40 So. 167.

16. Cal.—People v. Koller, 142 Cal. 621, 76 Pac. 500; People v. Patterson, 102 Cal. 239, 36 Pac. 436. Ga.—Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410. Ia.—*State v. An indictment alleging that in a certain county and on a certain day I. B. and O. G., "being and knowing themselves to be persons forbidden to intermarry by reason that the said I. B. was the father of the said O. G., and B. did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and incestuously have carnal knowledge each of the body of the other, contrary," etc., charges an

has been provided, an indictment conforming strictly to the statutory form is sufficient.¹⁸

2. Particular Averments.—a. The Act.—(I.) Generally.—Whether or not an indictment charging a single act of sexual intercourse is sufficient depends upon the statutory definition of the offense.¹⁹ It has also been said that a particular description of the specific act which constitutes the crime of incest, should be set forth.²⁰

(II.) Whether Committed Feloniously.—An allegation that the act was committed "feloniously" is not necessary, as the offense is a statutory one.²¹

(III.) Charging Commission by Both Parties.—In those jurisdictions where mutual consent is not an element of the offense it is not necessary that the indictment aver that the parties to the alleged crime had carnal knowledge of each other,²² it being sufficient to allege carnal knowledge upon the part of the accused only;²³ but under statutes making mutual assent of both parties essential to the commission of the offense, such assent must be alleged.²⁴

(IV.) Time of Commission.—Under statutes providing that where time is not of the essence of the offense its omission does not invalidate an indictment or information, neither the omission to state the time at which the incestuous act was committed,²⁵ nor an imperfect statement offense under Florida Rev. Sts., §2601, though it does not pursue the exact language of the statute. Brown v. State, 42 Fla. 184, 27 So. 869, wherein the court said, "We think the allegation that the defendants 'did unlawfully, feloniously and incestuously have carnal knowledge, each of the body of the other,' fully equivalent to an allegation that they did have voluntary sexual intercourse with each other."

An information fully apprised the defendant of the charge which he was called upon to meet, where it averred that the defendant "did wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously have sexual intercourse with N. E. S., a female child, she, the said N. E. S., being then and there the daughter of the said W. S. S.," etc. People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, 75 Pac. 166.

18. Baker v. State, 30 Ala. 521.

19. Thus, where the statute prohibits "adultery or fornication" within the prohibited degrees, since a single act of unlawful sexual intercourse falls within the definition of "adultery" or "fornication," according as the party is married or not, an indictment is sufficient which alleges a single act of unlawful sexual intercourse. State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 23 N. E. 747, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790.

20. Martin v. State, 58 Ark. 3, 22 S. W. 840.

21. Bolen v. People, 184 Ill. 338, 56 N. E. 408; State v. Judd, 132 Iowa 296, 109 N. W. 822. Contra, Newman v. State, 69 Miss. 393, 10 So. 580, for the reason that incest is a felony.

22. State v. Kimble, 104 Iowa 19, 73 N. W. 348; State v. Hurd, 101 Iowa 391, 70 N. W. 613; State v. Ellis, 11 Mo. App. 588, affirmed, 74 Mo. 385.

Nor does an allegation of carnal intercourse between the parties necessarily carry with it the idea that the indictment has charged the intercourse to have been with the consent of the prosecutrix. Tate v. State (Tex. Crim.), 77 S. W. 793.

"Sexual intercourse" and "carnal knowledge" are equivalents. Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 541.

23. State v. Kimble, 104 Iowa 19, 73 N. W. 348; State v. Hurd, 101 Iowa 391, 70 N. W. 613.

An allegation that the defendant "did commit fornication," is a sufficient averment of carnal knowledge. State v. Dana, 59 Vt. 614, 622, 10 Atl. 727.

24. State v. Jarvis, 20 Ore. 437, 26 Pac. 362, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141.

25. Barnhouse v. State, 31 Ohio St. 39.

thereof renders the indictment defective.²⁶ Nor need the indictment disclose whether the incestuous act was committed before or after the adoption of the statute in force, where there is no difference between the punishment of the offense under the statute in force at the time of bringing the indictment and that prescribed in the antecedent law.²⁷

Charging Offense With Continuando. — While an indictment for incest which charges the criminal act to have been committed continuously through a specified period of years, is to be regarded as charging several distinct offences, and is bad for duplicity,²⁸ if it charges the offense to have been committed on a day certain, and on divers days, before and after that time, it has been held to aver the time of committing the offense with sufficient certainty, since the continuando can be rejected as surplusage.²⁹

(V.) Whether by Adultery or Fornication. — The indictment in some states must charge incestuous adultery; if one or both were married,³⁰ or incestuous fornication if both were unmarried.³¹ Therefore, if incestuous adultery is charged it should allege the marriage of the defendant at the time of committing the offense,³² or if incest by fornication is charged, the indictment should allege that the defendant was an unmarried man at the time of committing the offense;³³ but a particular allegation is not necessary, where the words and language employed in

27. Baker v. State, 30 Ala. 521.

28. Barnhouse v. State, 31 Ohio St. 39, since a single act of intercourse where the other conditions exist, is all that is required, under the statute, to complete the offense. See also State v. Temple, 38 Vt. 37.

29. Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410. But see State v. Temple, 38 Vt. 37, wherein one count of the indictment alleged that the accused committed the incestuous act "on the 20th day of September, A. D. 1860, and on divers other days and times between said 20th day of September and the 9th day of December, A. D. 1862," and it was held bad on motion in arrest of judgment, in that it alleged a series of offenses, and that too without specifying any particular day when each was committed except the first, and that the continuando could not be rejected as surplusage, as the substance of it was not wholly immaterial to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

30. State v. Fritts, 48 Ark. 66, 2 S. W. 256.

Charging a defendant with having committed adultery with a person named, by then and there having sexual intercourse with her, is equivalent to charging that they did commit adultery and fornication together. Lowther v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. 522.

Charging O with "incestuous connection" with P, daughter of O and his wife, sufficiently charges that O was a married man and therefore sufficiently charges adultery as it must be assumed that A was living at the time, otherwise she would not then have been his wife. Hintz v. State, 58 Wis. 493, 17 N. W. 639.

31. State v. Fritts, 48 Ark. 66, 2 S. W. 256.

32. Martin v. State, 58 Ark. 3, 22 S. W. 840.

Reason.—If the defendant is guilty of the crime of incest by having committed adultery with his daughter, every allegation necessary to charge him with adultery should be made in the indictment, and the allegation that he was a married man at the time is a necessary allegation, as the allegation that he was an unmarried man would have been necessary had he been charged with the crime of incest by having committed fornication with his daughter. Martin v. State, 58 Ark. 3, 22 S. W. 840.

33. State v. Fritts, 48 Ark. 66, 2 S. W. 256. See Martin v. State, 58 Ark. 3, 22 S. W. 840.

In other states, however, upon the theory that the gist of the offense is the sexual intercourse,³⁵ and that an allegation as to whether the act charged is adultery or fornication or both is a conclusion of law,³⁶ an indictment or information charging sexual intercourse between parties within the prohibited degrees is sufficient, though not specifically alleging fornication or adultery.³⁷ Consequently an information will sustain a conviction though it avers that the act which constituted the crime was fornication, where one party was married.³⁸

b. The Parties to the Act.—(I.) Charging Female To Be a Woman. The indictment need not charge that the female was a woman.³⁹

34. State v. Ratcliffe, 61 Ark. 62, 31 S. W. 978.

An indictment for incest which alleges that defendant did "incestuously and adulterously have carnal knowledge of the body of" a person named, being a married man and the father of the person named, sufficiently alleges that he was a married man at the time the offense was committed. State v. Ratcliffe, 61 Ark. 62, 31 S. W. 978.

35. People v. Cease, 80 Mich. 576, 45 N. W. 585.

36. McCaskill v. State, 55 Fla. 117, 45 So. 843, wherein the charge was the commission of "adultery and fornication."

An allegation that the crime of adultery and fornication have been committed may be regarded as surplusage not affecting the sufficiency of the facts alleged to charge the single offense of incest denounced by the statute. McCaskill v. State, 55 Fla. 117, 45 So. 843.

37. Fla.—McCaskill v. State, 55 Fla. 117, 45 So. 843; Brown v. State, 42 Fla. 184, 27 So. 869. Kan.—State v. Learned, 73 Kan. 328, 85 Pac. 293. Mich.—People v. Cease, 80 Mich. 576, 45 N. W. 585.

In People v. Cease, 80 Mich. 576, 45 N. W. 585, the court said: "It was unnecessary to allege that the respondent committed adultery or fornication, inasmuch as the information distinctly charged him with the act which constituted the crime of incest."

A count of an information which charges that at a certain time and place, within the jurisdiction of the court, a man (naming him) and a woman (naming her), he being a married man and the grandfather of the woman, and she being an unmarried woman, and being his granddaughter, "did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and incestuously have sexual intercourse with each other," is sufficient, it not being requisite to allege that they committed adultery, or fornication with each other. State v. Learned, 73 Kan. 328, 85 Pac. 293.

An information, alleging that on the day named, O did have incestuous connection with P, daughter of said O and his wife, A, sufficiently alleges the marriage of the defendant, after verdict, at least. Hintz v. State, 58 Wis. 493, 17 N. W. 639.

38. People v. Cease, 80 Mich. 576, 45 N. W. 585. But see State v. Fritts, 48 Ark. 66, 2 S. W. 256, wherein it is said: "A party indicted for the crime of incest committed by fornication cannot be convicted unless it is both alleged and proved that he was unmarried at the time specified in the indictment."

Under an information charging incest by fornication with his niece, the fact that the proof shows that defendant was a married man is no bar to a conviction. People v. Rouse, 2 Mich. N. P. 209.

39. An indictment charging that D, a man, being the father of C. D., a girl, and within the degree of consanguinity prohibited, did have sexual intercourse with said C. D. was not subject to demurrer for failing to charge that C. D. was a woman; that is, a female at the age of puberty, charging, as it does, that she was a girl is sufficient. Dixon v. State, 147 Ala. 91, 41 So. 734, 119 Am. St. Rep. 57.

Under Alabama code, 1896, §4889, the offense may be committed, at least by the man, on a female within the pro-

(II.) Negating Marriage Between. — Under a statute applicable alike to parties who are intermarried within the prohibited degrees, as well as the unmarried, it is not necessary that the indictment negative the marriage of the parties,⁴⁰ and even if a legal marriage had been contracted in another state, and the parties had subsequently come into the state, this marriage would have to be set up as an affirmative defense and no allegation would have to be incorporated in the information to negative marriage⁴¹ though in one jurisdiction the contrary has been held on the ground that the court could not assume the impossibility of a legal marriage between the parties;⁴² nor would it seem to be necessary to allege that marriage was prohibited between the parties.⁴³

(III.) Relationship Between. — (A.) GENERALLY. — Averment of the exact relationship of the parties is an essential part of the indictment or information,⁴⁴ but all that is required is that the relationship of the parties be clearly stated,⁴⁵ without also averring that the parties were hibited degree, without respect to her age. Dixon v. State, 147 Ala. 91, 41 So. 734, 119 Am. St. Rep. 57.

40. State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 108, 23 N. E. 747, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790; State v. Nakashima, 62 Wash. 686, 114 Pac. 894.

An indictment was not fatally defective in alleging that the defendant did "unlawfully" intermarry with a person named, because it thereby failed to charge affirmatively that there was a marriage. It charged a "marriage" and that it was an "unlawful" one. Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 186, 203, 20 S. W. 399, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802.

41. State v. Nakashima, 62 Wash. 686, 114 Pac. 894.

42. State v. Fritts, 48 Ark. 66, 2 S. W. 256, under §§1578, 4592, Mansf. Dig.

The indictment should show with certainty that the woman was not the wife of the man. State v. Fritts, 48 Ark. 66, 2 S. W. 256, wherein the court said: "It will not do to assume that no legal marriage could have been celebrated between the parties. For if they were married in this state before the passage of the act, or were married since that date in any state or foreign country of which they were citizens, or subjects, and in which marriages between cousins german are not forbidden, then their union was not unlawful and it is not invalidated by the law. If an incestuous marriage has in fact been contracted, the indictment should charge that James Fritts incestuously did intermarry with, and take to be his wife, Mattie Phillips, the cousin of said James Fritts, they being descended from the same grandfather," etc.

An averment that defendant was unmarried sufficiently shows by necessary implication that the female was not his wife. State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 23 N. E. 747, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790.

43. "If the allegation that marriage is prohibited between the parties is necessary (which we do not decide) in addition to the allegation that the parties are related within the degrees of consanguinity specified in said sections, it is sufficient to allege that marriage is prohibited between them without adding the words by the laws of the state of Vermont. The conclusion, contra formam statuti, sufficiently shows that the offense charged in the indictment is an offense under a statute law of the state of Vermont." State v. Dana, 59 Vt. 614, 624, 10 Atl. 727.

44. State v. Reedy, 44 Kan. 190, 24 Pac. 66.

Kansas.—Preliminary Papers.—A specific, detailed and formal description of the offense is not required in the preliminary papers upon which an examination is had. All that is required is a general description of the offense. An averment of the relationship of the parties is not required in the complaint and warrant. State v. Reedy, 44 Kan. 190, 24 Pac. 66.

45. Cal.—People v. Kaiser, 119 Cal. 456, 51 Pac. 702. III.—Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 426, 65 Am. Dec. 672. La.—State v. Guilton, 51 La. Ann. 155, 24

within the degrees of consanguinity within which marriages are prohibited, or declared by law to be incestuous and void,³⁸ and, where the statute makes no distinction between relationship by consanguinity or affinity, without alleging that they were related by blood or affinity.³⁷

It is not essential that the indictment allege the names of the parties through whom the relationship is traced,³⁸ or disclose that the female with whom the adultery was committed was a daughter of the defendant born in lawful wedlock,³⁹ or where incest with ones step-daughter

So. 784. Mich.—Hicks v. People, 10 Mich. 395. Ohio.—State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 23 N. E. 747, 21 Am. St. Rep. 799.

Sufficient Averments of Relationship. An indictment for incest which charges that the acts were upon the person of A. B., the said A. B., then and there being the daughter of him, the said C. D., sufficiently avers the relationship between the parties. Begon v. People, 17 Ill. 426, 65 Am. Dec. 672; Hicks v. People, 10 Mich. 395. But conversely, an indictment which alleges that the defendant had carnal knowledge of one, F. W., and that defendant was the father of F. W., was held sufficient, though it was not alleged that F. W. was the daughter of defendant. Waggoner v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 199, 32 S. W. 896.

Allegations in an indictment that defendant was the father of the woman involved, and therefore within the prohibited degrees; that he was a married man, and therefore capable of committing adultery; and that he incestuously and adulterously had carnal knowledge of his daughter, clearly meaning that he committed adultery with her,—all taken together make up a good indictment for the crime of incest. State v. Ratcliffe, 61 Ark. 62, 31 S. W. 978.

An allegation in an information that the defendant had sexual intercourse with his niece, knowing her to be of such relationship, sufficiently complies with a statute requiring that the information be direct and certain as regards the offense charged, and is not open to the objection that it does not allege the relationship of the parties. State v. James, 32 Utah 152, 157, 89 Pac. 460.

46. Hicks v. People, 10 Mich. 395.

Where a statute in general terms prohibited the sexual act between persons "nearer of kin . . . than cousins," the kinship being averred to be that of uncle and niece, it was held unnecessary to aver in addition, that which was matter of law, that they were nearer of kin than cousins. State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 23 N. E. 747, 21 Am. St. Rep. 799.

Where the statute fixes the limit in degrees which include the uncle and the niece, an indictment informs the defendant of the degrees of consanguinity within which marriage or concubinage is prohibited, by charging that he, the uncle, lived in concubinage with his niece. State v. Guiton, 51 La. Ann. 153, 24 So. 784.

47. State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 23 N. E. 747, 21 Am. St. Rep. 799.

48. An indictment which alleges that the woman named as particeps was the daughter of the defendant's brother is sufficient, though the name of that brother is not specified. State v. Pennington, 41 W. Va. 599, 23 S. E. 918.

An indictment which clearly showed that the female with whom it was alleged the defendant committed the crime of incest was the defendant's niece, the daughter of his brother, and that the defendant and his brother were children of the same father and mother, was held to sufficiently show the relationship of the parties to the offense. It was not necessary for the indictment to allege that the defendant and his brother were lawful issue of their parents, nor that there was a lawful marriage of their parents. Neither was it necessary for the indictment to give the name of the mother of the defendant; nor to allege that the female was the lawful daughter of defendant's brother; nor was it necessary for the indictment to give the name of her mother, nor that she was born of a lawful marriage of her parents. Bailey v. State, 63 Tex. Crim. 584, 141 S. W. 224.

49. Baker v. State, 30 Ala. 521; State v. Laurence, 95 N. C. 659.

The crime is complete, under the is averred to allege the marriage of the defendant to the mother or the subsistence of the marriage relation at the time of the commission of the act.⁵⁰

(B.) KNOWLEDGE OF RELATIONSHIP.—Where the statutory definition is entirely silent as to any scienter, the indictment need not charge the defendant with knowledge of the relationship of the parties to the act.⁵¹ But, conversely, where the statute makes a knowledge of the relationship an essential ingredient of the offense, an indictment is bad which fails to so allege.⁵² statute, if she was his natural daughter." Baker v. State, 20 Ala. 521.

Though it was sought to quash the indictment upon the ground "that it does not aver that L. C. was the legitimate daughter, of the whole blood, of the defendant, by her mother, to whom he was legally married," it was held that the indictment was sufficient, since it charged the offense in the language of the statute, and so plainly and distinctly that the jury could clearly understand the nature of the offense. Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410.

"It is only when the statutory definition contains the words 'knowing' or 'knowingly' that such an allegation is required. Where it does not, it is only necessary to follow the ordinary rules of criminal pleading prevailing in this state, and charge the offense in the language of the statute." People v. Koller, 112 Cal. 621, 76 Pac. 500; State v. Hallinger, 54 Mo. 142; State v. Pennington, 41 W. Va. 339, 23 S. E. 918, wherein the court said: "It is said the indictment is bad in not alleging that Pennington knew that Arenia Pennington was his niece. The statute (section 22, chapter 149, Code 1891) does not make this an element in the definition of the offense, and the indictment follows the statute. It is contended that this is a case where a statute ought to be construed to contemplate, as an essential element of the offense, though not mentioned, a knowledge on the part of the man of the woman's relationship, as, if he be ignorant of it, he cannot be guilty; and, as it must be shown, it ought to be alleged as a material averment. This view seems to me strong, but it seems settled that generally, it is sufficient to use the language of the act defining a statutory offense, and such this is; and that, with particular relation to this offense, it is settled that unless the statute make such knowledge a part of the definition of the offense, . . . the indictment need not allege it. . . . In State v. Dana, 59 Vt. 614 (10 Atl. 727), it was again so held, and the court said it was not necessary to allege and prove affirmatively that respondent knew the relationship existing between him and the particeps."

Under a Texas statute defining incest to be the intermarrying or carnal knowledge of persons within the forbidden degrees, but not employing the word "knowingly," it was held that an indictment charging an unlawful marriage was not fatally defective, because it failed to charge that defendant "knowingly" entered into such marriage. Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 186, 20 S. W. 399, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802.

52. Williams v. State, 2 Ind. 439.

Using the word "unlawfully" is not equivalent to an allegation that the defendant had intercourse with his daughter, "knowing her to be such." Williams v. State, 2 Ind. 439.

The use of the word "feloniously"

Mutual Knowledge.— It is unnecessary to charge a mutual knowledge of the relationship, if the charge of knowing of the relationship is made against the party indicted,⁵⁴ unless by the statute the parties committing the offense must each have had knowledge of their relationship.⁵⁴

D. THE TELAL.—VARIANCE.— In accordance with the general rule the allegations in the indictment and the proof must substantially correspond, a material variance therein being fatal.⁵⁵

III.—PROSECUTION OF ATTEMPT TO COMMIT OFFENSE.— An information for attempt to commit incest should aver knowledge of the relationship and intent or facts from which intent is a necessary inference.⁵⁶ It need not negative the presumption that the attempt failed of commission through the volition of defendant.⁵⁷ is not equivalent to charging that the act was done knowingly, i. e., with the knowledge on the part of the defendant of the relationship of the parties, even were it necessary to allege such knowledge. State v. Judd, 132 Iowa 296, 109 N. W. 892.

53. Morgan v. State, 11 Ala. 289.

In Morgan v. State, 11 Ala. 289, the court said: "1. It is argued that this indictment is defective, because it omits to charge the female with knowledge of the relation between herself and the other guilty party. It is true, the statute defines the offense to be the living in a state of adultery of persons within the degrees of consanguinity, or relationship, whose marriages are declared by law to be incestuous and void, knowing of such consanguinity, but this, in our judgment, warrants no inference that the knowledge is to be common to both the parties, before the guilt of either can attach. If there be an aggravation in a crime like this, it would exist in the concealment of that knowledge, which, if communicated, might have prevented its commission. The evident object and intention of this clause of the statute is, to relieve the party ignorant of the relation from the severe penalty imposed on persons living in adultery, when a relationship also exists within the prohibited degrees. We are entirely satisfied the indictment is good."

54. Baumer v. State, 49 Ind. 544, 19 Am. Rep. 691, under 2 G. & H. 452, §45.

55. Where the indictment charged the defendant with incestuous intercourse with the daughter of his sister, proof that the intercourse was with the niece of defendant was not sufficient. Blalack v. State (Tex. Crim.), 162 S. W. 807.

Immaterial variance in name. People v. Lake, 116 N. Y. 61, 17 N. E. 146, 6 Am. St. Rep. 344, wherein the indictment gave the name of defendant's daughter as "Georgiana Taylor," and the proof showed that she was named "Georgiana Jeanette," but the question of her identity was put at rest by her presence in court. See also State v. Petarosa, 70 Me. 216.

56. State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 249, 248, 56 Pac. 115, wherein the court said: "We think that, while an intent to carnally know each other is not directly avowed in the present information, it is the necessary and irresistible inference to be derived from the language that is employed; and, if such be the fact, it meets the requirements of the law in regard to criminal pleading. It charges that they did, at a certain time and place, wilfully . . . attempt carnally to know each other, and that the acts then described and set forth in the information were for the purpose of carnally knowing each other." We think that a person of ordinary understanding would have no difficulty in discovering from the language of this information that it charged the actors with intending to carnally know each other."

Knowledge of Relationship. An information is sufficient if it alleges that the defendant had knowledge of the relationship of the parties. State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 249, 56 Pac. 115. See also, C. 2, 6, (111), (12).

57. State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 249, 249, 56 Pac. 115.

A subsequent abandonment cannot avail defendant, if the elements of an attempt existed on his part. The rule is well settled that when a party proceeds far enough in the perpetration of a crime as to clearly indicate his intention, coupled with an attempt to carry it into effect, and thereafter desists or fails to consummate the crime, he may be found guilty of the attempt. State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 240, 249, 55 Pac. 115.

Scope of Article. — This article includes only the procedure relative to the person and estate of one who by excessive drinking, gaming, idleness, debauchery or the use of drugs so spends or wastes his estate as to be likely to expose himself or his family to want or suffering. The treatment of the guardianship of infants and insane persons and the incompetency of married women will be found under other titles.¹

I. APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIANS OR COMMITTEES. — A. STATUTORY PROVISIONS.—In a number of the states statutes have been enacted providing for the appointment of guardians for the property of spendthrifts² and drunkards or habitual users of morphine, opium, cocaine and similar drugs,³ both for the purpose of protecting the spendthrift and his family⁴ and also as a protection to the public,⁵ and the constitutionality of such statutes has been upheld;⁶ but since they are in derogation of the common law they are to be strictly construed,⁷ and beyond the requirements essential to the accomplishment and preservation of the legislative purpose and policy, they are not intended to encroach upon any rights of person or property, which the owner has by statutory or common law.⁸

B. JURISDICTION AND VENUE.—Jurisdiction over matters relative to the estates of spendthrifts and drunkards is conferred on different

But in Hamilton v. Probate Court 2

R. I. 204, the court said: "We do not mean to say, however, that in such a case it may not be advisable to notify the family of the proposed ward. The power of putting a person of full age

under guardianship is a great power, and to be exercised with great caution; and no ground should be afforded for even a suspicion, that it was intended to keep the proceedings secret from any member of his family or to prevent their being heard before the court."

Service on the alleged spendthrift in jail held to be a sufficient compliance

E. PLEADING.—The bill or petition for the appointment of a guardian should specify the cause for which relief is prayed,²⁰ the estate proposed to be secured²¹ and that the defendant is a resident of the county.²²

Under the Pennsylvania procedure any person aggrieved by the inquisition may traverse the same and if a replication be not filed the court may order the prothonotary to file one on behalf of the opposite party.²³

F. HEARING AND DETERMINATION.—PROCEEDINGS SHOULD NOT BE EX PARTE.—An inebriate cannot be confined in an asylum on ex parte affidavits without any provision for an examination.²⁴

Commission or Jury.—In some jurisdictions a jury is impaneled to try the question of the alleged incompetency,²⁵ while in others the inquiry is conducted by a commission.²⁶

Adjudication.—If the allegations of the bill are admitted either expressly or by failure to answer, or it is established by proof that the allegations are true the chancellor or other proper officer hearing the matter deprives the incompetent of all further control over his estate and provides for its safe keeping by the appointment of a trustee or overseer,²⁷ or he may couple the guardianship of the property with the

with a statute requiring notice to be left at his usual place of abode. Dunn's Appeal, 35 Conn. 82.

Notice is unnecessary where the incompetent files the petition. Pratt v. Court of Probate, 22 R. I. 596, 48 Atl. 943.

The cause of defendant's want of discretion need not be alleged. Angell v. Probate Court, 11 R. I. 187.

Waiver of Defects.—By appearing generally to the merits the defendant will be deemed to have "waived any jurisdictional defect arising out of the alleged insufficiency in the allegations of the application." Bishop v. Welch, 149 Ill. App. 491.

The power of the court is restricted to the estate proposed to be secured and specified in the bill. Jones v. Semple, 91 Ala. 182, 8 So. 557.

Findings.—The commission need not guardianship of the person,²⁸ or the court may appoint a guardian of his person regardless of whether he has an estate.²⁹ This appointment, however, must be for a reasonable time, expressly limited; otherwise it is void.³⁰

G. NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT.—Under some statutes the guardian is required to give public notice of his appointment and these provisions must be strictly complied with to enable the guardian to avoid contracts made by his ward with persons ignorant of his disability.³¹ Other statutes have required the filing of a certificate of the officers as to their doings and an inventory of the property taken.³²

H. APPEALS.—An appeal is not allowed to the petitioner after a dismissal of his petition for the appointment of a guardian,³³ but the alleged incompetent may appeal from a decision depriving him of his liberty.³⁴

I. COSTS.—While the estate of the incompetent will be taxed with the costs of the proceedings in which his incompetency is adjudicated, the court should endeavor to keep such costs as low as possible.³⁵ It return a finding to the effect that the party is incapable of managing his estate. It is sufficient to find that he is an habitual drunkard. McGinnis v. Com., 74 Pa. 245; Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 172.

Under a statute which authorizes a probate court to appoint a guardian of the person and estate of a person who "from want of discretion in managing his estate, shall be likely to bring himself or family to want, or to render himself or family chargeable," a decree which finds simply that the petitioner "is lacking in discretion" and does not find that he is likely to bring himself to want or to render himself chargeable is insufficient to warrant the appointment of a guardian. *Pratt v. protection. In the case before us all idea of an invasion of the husband's right is excluded by the fact that this proceeding was had upon his application."

The court is not authorized to allow to the solicitor of the petitioner any-

II. CLAIMS AND ACTIONS.—The guardian of an incompetent being invested with powers similar to those of the guardian of a minor should appear and prosecute or defend all suits by or against his ward,³⁷ but an action should not be brought against the guardian personally for the liabilities of his ward,³⁸ nor his accounts investigated in a suit against the ward,³⁹ for recourse may be had against the guardianship bond,⁴⁰ or by proceeding against the property of the ward by petition or as in other civil cases.⁴¹

Effect of Incompetent's Death.—The estate, powers and duties of the trustee of an inebriate's estate, under the Alabama Code, §§2502-2506, like the committee of a lunatic in England, terminate with the death of the inebriate though he still remains liable to account; and having filed a bill in equity to set aside a conveyance of land executed by the inebriate after his appointment, the suit abates by the death and cannot be continued or revived in the name of the heirs of the inebriate jointly with the trustee. Ex parte Williams, 87 Ala. 547, 6 So. 314.

A suit will not lie against the statutory guardian of a common drunkard, on a note made by such drunkard prior to the appointment of such guardian. The suit must be against the drunkard himself. Coombs v. Janvier, 31 N. J. L. 240.

The trustee of an habitual drunkard cannot be sued upon a contract entered into before inquisition found although he may have effects in his hands sufficient to pay. Steel v. Young, 4 Watts (Pa.) 459.

39. "Whether the ward's property has been judiciously and legally managed and invested by the guardian is a proper subject of investigation and inquiry upon the adjustment of the guardian's accounts in the probate court but it is not open to inquiry in a suit against the ward for the recovery of a debt." *Pendexter v. Petition to the chancery court for payment. L'Amoureux v. Crosby, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 422, 22 Am. Dec. 655. See also Matter of Heller, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 199; Hall & Hall v. Taylor, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 428.

Where it is necessary for the creditor of an habitual drunkard to file a bill against the committee, to establish a debt and to obtain satisfaction thereof out of the estate of the drunkard, such incompetent may also be made a party defendant in the suit; so as to make the proceedings binding on him in case he should be restored to the possession and control of his estate before the termination of the suit. Beach v. Bradley & Lay, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 146.

Action at Law.—In Sternbergh v. Schoolcraft, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 153, it was held that a judgment recovered in a court of law against a person who has been found an habitual drunkard and whose person and property have been placed in the custody of a committee will not, for that reason, be declared void, though the court of chancery which appointed the committee might have interfered by injunction to re-

Actions Between Guardian and Ward.—Civil actions between the ward and his guardian are postponed until the relation subsisting between them can be dissolved.⁴²

III. SETTLEMENTS.—The trustee must at stated intervals make partial settlement of his accounts and may be required to do so at any time, and on the termination of the trust must make final settlement thereof, such settlements being governed largely by the rules regulating the settlements of general guardians.⁴³

IV. PROTECTION OF GUARDIAN.—It is the duty of the court to aid and protect the guardian in the proper exercise of his right to the care and control of an habitual drunkard and to give him directions on the subject when necessary.⁴⁴

V. REMOVAL OF GUARDIAN AND RESTORATION OF ESTATE.—REMOVAL.—The guardian may be removed by the appointing tribunal or officer for neglect of duty or mismanagement of his trust, and another appointed in his place.⁴⁵ strain such suit and might have punished as for contempt any interference by suit when the person interfering acted with full knowledge of the commission.

Sufficiency of Complaint.—Where the complaint against a committee omitted to allege or show by what court or authority the debtor was declared an habitual drunkard and the custody of his person and estate awarded to the defendant, it was held bad on demurrer. Hall & Hall v. Taylor, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 428.

Where the chancellor has settled the amount due and ordered it paid out of the estate, with costs, his further order that the creditor may sue in the event of non-payment, is erroneous, the proper remedy to compel payment being a summary proceeding against the committee. Beach v. Bradley & Lay, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 146.

42. Mason v. Mason, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 506.

The committee of an habitual drunkard who holds a mortgage against the estate, cannot, without the sanction of the court, enforce it by proceedings of foreclosure under the statute. Matter of Carter, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 146.

43. Ala. Code, 1907, §4617. See generally the title "Guardian and Ward."

Reference to Master.—See Matter of Carter, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 146.

Effect of Neglect of Duty.—If the committee neglects to file an inventory or to render his accounts regularly under oath, in the settlement of his accounts every presumption will be taken most strongly against him. Matter of Carter, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 145. And in Stephens v. Marshall, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 641, it was held that under such circumstances he would be charged with one-half of the expenses of the accounting.

44. Where a third person, without the consent and against the wishes of the committee, has the custody of, or harbors the habitual drunkard, the committee should apply to the court ex parte for an order that such person deliver the drunkard up to the committee, or cease from harboring him; and if such order is disobeyed, the party will be punished for a contempt of court. Matter of Ann Lynch, 5 Paige ch. (N. Y.) 120.

In the case of an habitual drunkard if the committee finds that any person is furnishing him with the means of intoxication, even gratuitously, he should apply to the court for an order restraining all persons from furnishing the drunkard with ardent spirits or with the means of obtaining liquor on pain of contempt. Matter of Heller, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 199.

45. Conn. Gen. St., 1902, §1833; Dickerson v. Dickerson, 31 N. J. Eq. 652.

Costs of Removal Proceedings. Where the committee has been guilty of gross negligence, he will be decreed to pay the costs of the proceedings against him to obtain his removal. Matter of Carter, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 146.

Restoration of Estate.—On petition of the person whose estate has been committed to the control of a trustee or guardian and on notice to such trustee, or guardian and on satisfactory proof of the reformation of the incompetent person and of his fitness to have charge of his estate, the chancellor or court must order that it be restored to him.⁴⁵

The incompetent on whose application the discharge of the guardianship has been ordered cannot attack such order on the ground that the guardian was not properly notified. Cockrill v. Cockrill, 92 Fed. 811, 34 C. C. A. 254.

Discretion of Court.—The power given the courts to release spendthrifts from guardianship is such that the appellate court will not revise their exercise of such power, unless a very strong case of abuse is shown. Williston v. White, 11 Vt. 40.

Ex Parte Hearing.—A commission under which a person has been found an habitual drunkard "ought not to be superseded upon an ex parte hearing without notice, and upon the evidence of affidavits merely, even with the assent of the guardian." Matter of Weis, 16 N. J. Eq. 318.

Reference to Master.—In Matter of Weis, 16 N. J. Eq. 318, it was suggested that the "most convenient, safe, and expeditious course" in cases of habitual drunkardness would be to adopt the practice in cases of lunacy and refer the matter to a master.

the good faith execution of the agency;⁷ and there is implied in every contract of agency a contract to indemnify the principal if he sustains any loss through the neglect of the agent.⁸

Generally whenever the wrongful act of one person results in liability being imposed on another, the latter may have indemnity from the person actually guilty of the wrong.⁹

C. DISTINGUISHED FROM CONTRIBUTION.¹⁰ — Indemnity springs from contract, express or implied, while contribution is an equity founded on acknowledged principles of natural justice.¹¹ In contribution only a proportionate amount is recovered, while in indemnity the recovery is of the whole amount of the damage to the indemnitee.¹²

D. DISTINGUISHED FROM AGREEMENT TO PAY OR PERFORM. — Under agreement to pay or perform some act a recovery may be had as soon as there is a breach of the contract, and the measure of damages is the full amount agreed to be paid. In contracts to indemnify, the obligee must have been actually damnified and can only recover to the extent of the injury sustained up to the time of the institution of the suit.¹³

From Promissory Notes. — A contract of indemnity is easily distinguished from a promissory note in that the one is a contingent liability while the other is an absolute promise.¹⁴

E. DISTINGUISHED FROM CONTRACTS OF INSURANCE. — Strictly speaking, contracts of insurance are contracts of indemnity since they appertain to the person or party to the contract, and not to the thing which is subject to the risk against which its owner is protected;¹⁵ but it must be remembered that a contract of insurance may be one against liability as distinguished from a contract against loss by reason of liability.¹⁶

F. DISTINGUISHED FROM SURETYSHIP. — A contract of indemnity is not one to pay as in case of suretyship, but one to make good a future loss or damage.¹⁷

G. FROM GUARANTY. — Though the words "guaranty" and "indemnity" are sometimes used interchangeably,¹⁸ and in one sense it may be said that all guarantees are contracts of indemnity,¹⁹ there is, in principle, an obvious and important difference between a contract of guaranty and a contract of indemnity.²⁰

State v. Hays, 30 W. Va. 107, 3 S. E. 177. Wis.—Taylor v. Coon, 79 Wis. 76, 48 N. W. 123.

14. See Jenckes v. Rice, 119 Iowa 451, 93 N. W. 381, where an instrument was in form a promissory note but contained a sentence reciting that the note was given to secure the payee against a specified loss. Reading the whole together the court says "it was intended and understood as a contract of indemnity only." And see also Steere v. Trebilcock, 108 Mich. 464, 66 N. W. 342, where a note was made payable on demand, but after the signature appeared these words: "This note is to be paid when Coffin & Stanton make first payment on bonds." This was a contract of indemnity.

But compare Price v. Rodman, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 213, where indorsers and maker of promissory notes entered into a contract of indemnity as to their respective liability. See also the title "Bills and Notes."

Polk*, 67 Ind. 55, where a contract was held to be an independent contract of indemnity though it recited "we hereby guarantee." See also Dent v. Arthur, 156 Mo. App. 472, 137 S. W. 285, where the promisor told the promisee to take an appeal and he "would guarantee that he would not lose any." This was an original promise of indemnity.

The words "indemnity" and "compensation" construed. See Bayley v. Employer, etc. Co., 125 Cal. 345, 58 Pac. 7.

So where a bond read "should said Brown indemnify the said (plaintiffs) and save them perfectly free and harmless from the operation of said judgments by virtue of the liens thereof," the bond was not a mere bond of indemnity, but damage from the judgments must be shown. Loyd v. Marvin, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 464.

19. Harburg India, etc. Co. v. Martin (1902), 1 K. B. 778.

20. Anderson v. Spence, 72 Ind. 315, 37 Am. Rep. 162.

The use of the word "guaranty" in a contract primarily means that the one making the contract promises to make good the default of another.²¹

A contract of guaranty always presupposes some other contract or transaction to which it is collateral,²² while a contract of indemnity is essentially an original contract, the promisor and promisee being in direct privity.²³

Some English cases have drawn the distinction that a guaranty is a promise to a creditor to secure a debt due him while an indemnity is a promise to a debtor to secure the repayment of a debt payable by him.²⁴

In many cases it has been held that one who promises to indemnify another for becoming a guarantor for a third party is himself an indemnitor and his contract is an original contract of indemnity,²⁵ and a similar rule obtains where one indemnifies another for becoming a surety on a bail bond²⁶ or on an official bond.²⁷

H. FROM PROMISE TO ASSUME.—An ordinary clause in a deed whereby the grantee assumes and agrees to pay an incumbrance therein described, is not a contract of indemnity, notwithstanding the use of the words "save me harmless from the same;"²⁸ but under the circumstances surrounding them such contracts may be contracts of indemnity.²⁹

I. FROM AGREEMENT TO REPURCHASE.—Where one having no interest in stock save that of agent or broker in conducting a sale, at the seller's request agrees with purchasers that he will buy back 21. Dole v. Young, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 250.

22. See the title "Guaranty."

23. Ind.—Anderson v. Spence, 72 Ind. 315, 37 Am. Rep. 162; Spencer v. McLean, 20 Ind. App. 626, 50 N. E. 769. La.—Bain v. Arthur, 129 La. Ann. 143, 55 So. 743. Mass.—*Dole v. So in Halleck v. Moss, 22 Cal. 266, it being claimed defendant was a guarantor or surety and not an indemnitor, the court says: "We might inquire whose ability or liability to pay does he guarantee, or for whom is he surety? The contract is solely his own."

29. See Israel v. Reynolds, 11 Ill. 218, which speaks of such a contract as one "in the nature of an indemnity against the debt."

So in Young v. Schlosser, 65 Ind. 225, of a bond assuming the payment of taxes, liens, and incumbrances of every nature against lands purchased, the stock at par if so desired, his contract with the seller is one of indemnity and not an implied or express contract to repurchase necessitating a tender of the stock.³⁰ So a broker's contract to save purchasers harmless is one of indemnity not calling for a tender,³¹ and a contract of sale of bonds reserving a right to repurchase in consideration of a guaranty as to the interest and principal so long as the bonds remained in the hands of the purchaser is a contract of indemnity, and the purchaser must show damage before he can recover thereon.³²

II. PREREQUISITES TO BRINGING OF ACTION.—A. DEMAND ON INDEMNITOR OR NOTICE OF LIABILITY.—No demand on or notice to the indemnitor in a contract of indemnity is necessary prior to the commencement of suit.³³

B. SEEKING REMEDY AGAINST OTHERS.—The indemnified need not seek relief from a person against whose conduct the indemnity is given.³⁴

C. NECESSITY OF DEFENDING PRIOR SUIT.—Where one has been indemnified for going on another's official bond he may sue the indemnitor though it does not appear that he defended the suit on the bond unless it is affirmatively shown that he could have successfully defended.³⁵

D. NOTICE TO INDEMNITORS TO DEFEND PRIOR SUIT.³⁶—1. Under Express Contract of Indemnity.—The general rule is that in the absence of some special agreement the indemnitor is not entitled to any notice to defend suit against the person indemnified, as a condition precedent to a suit by the latter.³⁷

34. One who has been indemnified for going on a bail bond need not after the prisoner's default of appearance, demand payment of the amount of the bond from the prisoner. McCormick v. Boylan, 83 Conn. 686, 78 Atl. 335, 1912 A. Ann. Cas. 882.

One who has by contract indemnified a municipality for permitting a society to occupy a sidewalk may be sued on the contract of indemnity, although the city has made no effort to recover from the society. Springfield v. Boyle, 164 Mass. 591, 42 N. E. 333.

One who has indemnified another for becoming an indorser on a third party's note may be sued on his contract of indemnity as soon as the indorser has been compelled to pay the note, and the indorser is not obliged to first exhaust his remedy against the maker. Kempton v. Coffin, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 129.

35. Doran v. Davis, 43 Iowa 86.

A plea in an action on an indemnity bond given to induce the obligees to become sureties on an execution bond, that the executors had not defended a suit on the latter bond, is defective if it does not aver that there was a legal defense which might have been set up. Brown & Cawwood v. Murdock & Brauner, 16 Md. 521.

36. As affecting conclusiveness of judgment, see infra, V, E.

37. So in Halleck v. Moss, 22 Cal. 266, one who had indemnified the

One may covenant absolutely to be bound by the result of a suit, in which case he is not entitled to any notice. Or his covenant may be one of general indemnity only, in which case, while notice does not go to the cause of action, the want of notice makes the judgment only prima facie evidence of liability.³⁸ Also it has been held that there must either be a notice and an opportunity to defend, or it must appear that the plaintiff in the former action had a good cause of action on the face of the contract,³⁹ and a person indemnified cannot charge the indemnitor with the costs of defending a suit on a debt clearly due unless authorized by him to defend.⁴⁰ On the other hand if the indemnitor has notice of the suit and refuses to defend he is chargeable with the costs.⁴¹

2. On Implied Indemnity.—The omission to give notice does not go to the right of action but simply changes the burden of proof and imposes upon the party against whom the judgment was recovered the necessity of again litigating and establishing all of the actionable facts.⁴²

3. Sufficiency of Notice.—Express notice is not necessary, but it is sufficient if one was present and aided in the defense.⁴² The notice executors of an estate against loss from paying an assessment on stock, a provision in the contract of indemnity, "if the said stock in the course of the administration of said estate shall be sold at auction upon reasonable notice the proceeds of said sale shall amount to as much as the assessment to be paid by the executors as aforesaid," has reference to the notice of sale, which having been given in the form prescribed by law is conclusively "reasonable." The indemnitor was not entitled to any special notice, and having notice of the sale is presumed to have notice of the deficiency. See also Batchelder v. Wendell, 36 N. H. 204; Lamb v. Harrison's Admr., 2 Leigh (Va.) 525.

One who has been indemnified for going on a probate bond need not give notice of suit brought thereon as prerequisite to maintaining his action against the indemnitor. French v. Parish, 14 N. H. 496.

38. Binsse v. Wood, 37 N. Y. 526; Bridgeport Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 34 N. Y. 275; Aberdeen v. Blackmar, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 324; Lee v. Clark, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 56; Browne v. French, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 445, 22 S. W. 581.

39. It appeared that the contract of indemnity was given to induce one who held the stakes of a horse race to pay them to one party to the wager. The face of the contract shows as a matter of law that the other party had a cause of action against the stakeholder for the money deposited by him. Hence it was not necessary to declare any notice to defend. Fender v. Stiles, 31 Ill. 460.

40. French v. Parish, 14 N. H. 496.

41. French v. Parish, 14 N. H. 496.

42. Village of Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550.

One who has been joined as a party defendant in the original suit and against whom the action has been discontinued on demurrer by the other defendant for misjoinder of parties defendant and who thereupon withdrew and was not notified or requested to continue in the defense, cannot be held liable over on the judgment. Boston v. Brooks, 187 Mass. 286, 73 N. E. 206.

43. So in City of Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black (U. S.) 418, 17 L. ed. 298, one was held liable over where he knew the case was in court, was told of the day of trial, was applied to to assist in procuring testimony and wrote to a witness.

One who employed and paid counsel, was present at the trial and paid expenses of plaintiff and his witnesses, is liable though no express notice was given. Davis v. Smith, 79 Me. 351, 10 Atl. 55.

So it was held sufficient where one of the indemnitors appeared as coun-must be a reasonable notice affording an opportunity to interpose such defense as the indemnitor may desire.⁴⁴

III. ACCRUAL OF RIGHT OF ACTION.⁴⁵ — A cause of action on the indemnity does not accrue until the occurrence of the facts, conditions or liability stipulated against.⁴⁶

On an implied indemnity the right of action does not accrue until the damages have been ascertained and fixed in some mode and the plaintiff held liable therefor.⁴⁷

IV. DETERMINING LIABILITY OVER BEFORE JUDGMENT IN PRIOR SUIT. — No provision of law exists by which one noticed to come in may petition to have the question of his liability over set for defendant in the prior suit. Holbrook v. Holbrook, 15 Me. 9.

So in Village of Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550, a bank was held liable over where its president was also a trustee of the village seeking to hold the bank liable over and he consulted with the village attorney, was informed of the bank's probable liability, was a witness at the trial and directed an appeal.

Where a partnership made the engagement to indemnify and one partner was sued in a separate action on the same bond as principal obligor, and a second employed counsel to defend, the third partner had implied notice, and all were concluded by the judgment. Carman v. Noble, 9 Pa. 366.

44. Carroll v. Nodine, 41 Ore. 412, 69 Pac. 51, 93 Am. St. Rep. 743.

Notice held reasonable which gave information of the institution of the suit, the names of the parties thereto, the amount claimed, nature of injury alleged and place where accident was alleged to have occurred, with a statement that the person sought to be held liable over would be expected to make a proper defense. City of Astoria v. Astoria, etc. R. Co., 67 Ore. 538, 136 Pac. 645.

One sought to be held liable over cannot object that sufficient time was not given him to prepare his defense where he was present, by counsel at the trial, made no attempt to get a continuance and the case seems to have been fully and fairly tried. Veazie v. Penobscot R. Co., 49 Me. 119.

Personal notice served on the contractor and notice by mail to the sureties on his bond seems sufficient to make the judgment conclusive against them. City of Omaha v. Yancey, 91 Neb. 261, 135 N. W. 1044.

Where a contract of indemnity stipulated for "due notice," it was held that a shorter period of time than that allowed for default judgments ought not to be held conclusive as a matter of law when the parties offer to show as a matter of fact that it was not sufficient time to prepare a defense. Spokane v. Costello, 33 Wash. 98, 74 Pac. 58.

45. As affecting the statute of limitations, see the title "Limitation of Actions."

46. Where a committee was indemnified for borrowing money, no cause of action arose until an action was instituted and a judgment rendered therein against the committee, and no substantial cause of action would arise until the notes were actually paid. Hall v. Thayer, 12 Met. (Mass.) 130.

Where a bond of indemnity is against claims the indemnitee need not wait until an action is brought against her before commencing suit, since the condition is broken when the claim is made. Carman v. Noble, 9 Pa. 366; Leber v. Kauffelt, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 440.

Under an agent's contract of indemnity against loss from his neglect of duty, the right of action arises when the principal is damaged and not when the actual disobedience of orders takes place. Northern Assur. Co. v. Borgelt, 67 Neb. 282, 93 N. W. 226.

47. Veazie v. Penobscot R. Co., 49 Me. 119.

The right of action for the indemnity does not arise until judgment has been recovered against the person seeking to be indemnified and he has paid the judgment. City of Georgetown v. Groff, 136 Ky. 662, 124 S. W. 888; Clinton v. Boehm, 139 App. Div. 73, 124 N. Y. Supp. 789.

determined in advance of the original suit to avoid making a defense.⁴⁸

V. ACTIONS TO ENFORCE.—A. FORM OF ACTION.—It has been said a contract of indemnity may be enforced in equity by a suit for specific performance.⁴⁹

Ex Contractu or Ex Delicto.—The action on a bond of indemnity is one arising ex contractu and not one sounding in damages for an offense or quasi offense, although the act constituting the breach of the bond may be an offense or a quasi offense.⁵⁰

Where the contract is an express one assumpsit may be maintained thereon.⁵¹ But in an action on an implied promise to indemnify, the proper form of action at common law is case and not assumpsit.⁵²

B. PARTIES.—1. Application of the Rule of Privity.—A contract of indemnity may be assigned and suit maintained thereon by the assignee as in other cases.⁵³ But in general an action can only be maintained by a party to the contract or one for whose benefit it was made.⁵⁴

50. Gordon v. Stanley, 108 La. 182, 32 So. 531.

51. Where plaintiff's claim is founded on a promise of indemnity and not on a contract of record, the basis of his claim is assumpsit and not debt. Davis v. Smith, 79 Me. 351, 10 Atl. 55.

Where there is an express contract of indemnity by its terms containing nothing more than the law would imply, it is optional with the plaintiff to declare in general indebitatus assumpsit for money paid, or upon the special contract. Me.—Davis v. Smith, 79 Me. 351, 10 Atl. 55. Mass.—Gibbs v. Bryant, 1 Pick. 118. N. H.—Sanborn v. Emerson, 12 N. H. 57.

52. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Washington & B. Bridge Co., 194 Fed. 1011, since the original and fundamental basis of the recovery is not contract but tort to indemnify for which no promise, express or implied, arises warranting resort to the action of assumpsit. But see Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633.

53. See generally the titles "Assignments;" "Parties."

It was contended that a mortgage being merely given to indemnify the mortgagee, the liability under it being only contingent, and to a certain extent being indefinite could not be assigned so as to vest a right of action in the assignee. Carper v. Munger, 62 Ind. 481.

54. See generally the title "Parties."

One having been indemnified for turning over moneys in his hands claimed by an administrator, the administrator cannot bring suit on the contract of indemnity in the absence of some averment showing a state of facts entitling him to subrogation, or showing an assignment of the contract to him. Derry v. Morrison, 8 Ind. App. 50, 34 N. E. 107.

Making the indemnitee a party, and calling upon him to answer to his interest, does not change the rule. Derry v. Morrison, 8 Ind. App. 50, 34 N. E. 107.

A contract given to save an estate harmless from liens cannot be enforced by the lienor in the absence of some stipulation beneficial to him which has been broken. Young v. Schlosser, 65 Ind. 225.

Where a county treasurer has taken out in his own name a contract of indemnity to secure himself against his personal liability as custodian of the county funds he is himself the real party in interest entitled to sue thereon and not the county, at least so long as there is no liability over by reason of the embezzlement by or insolvency of the treasurer. Moulton v. McLean, 5 Colo. App. 454, 39 Pac. 78.

Notes having been consolidated, a contract of indemnity between the maker and the indorsers of the original notes whereby they provide for their respective obligations as between them-

In an action upon a cause of action against which indemnity has been given, the indemnitor as such, cannot be joined as a defendant.⁵⁵ Nor can a defendant, sued upon a liability against which he has been indemnified, bring in as a party, the indemnitor.⁵⁶ But these rules do not prevent the rendering of judgment against the one of two wrongdoers who is primarily liable where plaintiff has joined both.⁵⁷

Nor does the fact that an indemnifying bond has been given by one joint tortfeasor to the other prevent their joinder in an action on the tort;⁵⁸ but this rule does not extend to an indemnitor who has contracted against damages resulting from negligence in the doing of acts not wrongful in themselves;⁵⁹ and those statutes which in general terms provide that one who indemnifies another against an act to be done by the latter is liable jointly with the person indemnified, are merely declaratory of the common law rule.⁶⁰

Where the liability of the contracting parties in an indemnity contract is several, the action on the contract may be against one party alone.⁶¹

2. Contracts Running to Joint Indemnitees.—Where an indemnity bond runs to joint obligees one cannot sue thereon without joining the others as plaintiffs in the absence of an allegation that he alone was injured by the breach;⁶² but where only one of joint indemnitees has in fact suffered any damage he may sue alone,⁶³ though it is proper selves, cannot be enforced by an outside party who became a surety on the consolidated note. Price v. Rodman, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 213.

Where contractors have indemnified one for whom they are about to build against damages done to adjoining property, the owner of the adjoining property cannot sue on the contract of indemnity because not in privity thereto. French v. Vix, 143 N. Y. 90, 37 N. E. 612.

55. One whose land has been injured by a drainage ditch cannot in his suit against the county join persons who have contracted to indemnify the county for damages arising from the construction of the ditch. Peterson v. Roberts County, 31 S. D. 439, 141 N. W. 368.

56. A railroad sued for damages by abutting owners cannot bring in by cross-bill and make defendants in the suit, persons who have indemnified the railroad. Frey v. Ft. Worth, etc. R. Co., 56 Tex. 465, 25 S. W. 609; Texas Midland R. Co. v. Miers (Tex. Civ. App.), 37 S. W. 640.

58. Northam v. Casualty Co., 177 Fed. 981.

The sheriff and plaintiff in attachment may be sued as joint tortfeasors where the plaintiff gave the sheriff an indemnifying bond. U. S.—Northam v. Casualty Co., 177 Fed. 981. Cal.—Lewis v. Johns, 34 Cal. 629. N. Y.—Herring v. Hoppock, 15 N. Y. 409.

59. Thus one cannot join the bonding company who has given an indemnity bond to protect a corporation from the result of negligence in operating. Northam v. Casualty Co., 177 Fed. 981.

60. Northam v. Casualty Co., 177 Fed. 981 (construing Mont. Rev. Civ. Code, §5653, and distinguishing Moore v. Los Angeles Iron & Steel Co., 89 Fed. 73, which apparently construes otherwise); Cal. Civ. Code, §2777.

61. Hall v. Thayer, 12 Met. (Mass.) 130.

62. Percival v. McCoy, 13 Fed. 379.

In other words, when the plaintiff sues as beneficial obligee on a bond of indemnity he must allege that he had an interest in the performance of the duty and that the duty was imposed either for his sole benefit, or jointly for the benefit of himself and others. Clark v. Nickell (W. Va.), 79 S. E. 1020.

63. The indemnity ran to four co-sureties on a bond. One had died and the other two were insolvent. Plainin such a case to sue jointly, but to the use of the one damaged.⁶⁴

C. PLEADING. — 1. Plaintiff's Pleading in Action on Contract. Plaintiff's pleading in an action on a contract of indemnity must state the facts constituting his cause of action, in accordance with the rules elsewhere discussed.⁶⁵ It need not be alleged that the defendant received any benefit from the act which he requested the plaintiff to perform.⁶⁶

One suing on an indemnity given for going bail need not allege the authority to take the bail bond.⁶⁷

On a written contract of indemnity a consideration need not be pleaded in those jurisdictions where a written instrument imports a consideration.⁶⁸ The general rule is that the plaintiff must directly allege his damage.⁶⁹

2. Plea or Answer in Action on Contract. — Under the common law system of pleading non damnificatus is a good plea on a bond of indemnity.⁷⁰ The plea of "conditions performed" answers the same tiff alone was damaged. Cross v. Williams, 72 Mo. 577.

64. Perhaps the suit could only be maintained as a joint suit. But however that may be there is no impropriety in stating the facts showing the damage as to one only and declaring the same use which the law would necessarily imply from those facts. Mehaffy v. Lytle, 1 Watts (Pa.) 314.

Where an indemnity to save harmless for becoming bail ran to two persons, one of whom refused to recognize, but the other became bail and suffered damage through the prisoner's absconding, action may be brought jointly by the indemnitees for the benefit of that one who was damaged. Bird v. Washburn, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 223.

65. See the titles "Assumpsit;" "Bonds;" "Declaration and Complaint;" "Implied and Express Agreements."

As against a general demurrer a petition by a surety suing one who has indemnified him for going on an official bond is sufficient which alleges the execution and delivery of the contract, the breach of the bond, the consequent damage to the surety and the fact that it has not been made whole by either the principal or the indemnitors. American Bonding & T. Co. v. Burton, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 703, 99 S. W. 654.

A complaint seeking reimbursement on a contract of indemnity for becoming guarantor on a bond conditioned against acts of dishonesty by defendant sufficiently sets out a cause of action by setting up the facts showing a shortage was caused by defendant's fraud or dishonesty without any express and direct allegation that it was so caused. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, 65 N. W. 531, 56 Am. St. Rep. 464, 30 L. R. A. 586.

A contract indemnifying another against damage or expense from injuries occasioned by the use of machinery, is like a contract of insurance and the doctrines applied in actions for negligence have no further application than in determining whether a liability of the plaintiff to the persons injured is well pleaded. Woodbury v. Post, 158 Mass. 140, 33 N. E. 86.

So the right to recover upon a bond may by its terms depend not upon the presence or absence of negligence but upon whether the indemnitee has suffered a recovery. Omaha Gas Co. v. City of South Omaha, 71 Neb. 115, 98 N. W. 437.

66. McCormick v. Boylan, 83 Conn. 686, 78 Atl. 335, 1912 A. Ann. Cas. 882; Carman v. Noble, 9 Pa. 366.

69. Taylor v. Com., 79 Wis. 76, 48 N. W. 123.

In assumpsit with a special count declaring on a promise to indemnify, plaintiff must directly allege that he has been damaged. Farnsworth v. Nason, Brayt. (Vt.) 192.

70. This distinction drawn by many cases must, however, be borne in mind.

purpose as the plea "non damnificatus."⁷¹

3. Pleadings in Action on Implied Indemnity.—In an action on an implied obligation to indemnify, plaintiff must allege facts showing there was no defense to the action or claim for which he is seeking indemnity.⁷²

In an action for indemnity brought by one who has paid damages for injuries which he claims were the result of defendant's negligence he must allege facts showing absolutely no negligence in himself.⁷³

The declaration must so state the former cause of action that the court can clearly see that the cause there stated is identical with the cause stated in the present declaration.⁷⁴

D. CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENT IN PRIOR SUIT.—1. Where Opportunity To Defend Was Given.—A judgment in a prior suit establishing the liability of the plaintiff in the suit on the indemnity is conclusive on the indemnitor where he had full opportunity to defend or participate in the defense, whether or not he appeared.⁷⁵

The plea of non damnificatus cannot be pleaded where the condition is to discharge or acquit the plaintiff from such a bond or other particular thing; for there the defendant must set forth affirmatively the special matter of performance. But it is otherwise where the condition is to discharge and acquit the plaintiff from any damage by reason of such bond or particular thing for that is in truth the same thing with a condition to indemnify and save harmless. Cutler v. Southern, 1 Saund. 116, note 1, 85 Eng. Reprint 125. See also: N. Y.—Thomas v. Allen, 1 Hill 145; Port v. Jackson, 17 Johns. 239, 479; Douglas v. Clark, 14 Johns. 177. Pa. Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle 83. Vt.—Perry v. Ward, 82 Vt. 1, 71 Atl. 721. Va. Board of Supervisors v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. 608; Archer v. Archer's Adm., 8 Gratt. 539. W. Va.—Polong v. Maddox, 41 W. Va. 779, 24 S. E. 999; State v. Hays, 30 W. Va. 113, 3 S. E. 177.

But the plea of non damnificatus is no answer to a declaration which specifies the breaches in such a manner as to show damage. Dime Savings Inst. v. American Surety Co., 68 N. J. L. 440, 53 Atl. 217.

71. Board of Supervisors v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 608; Archer v. Archer's Adm., 8 Gratt. (Va.) 539; Poling v. Maddox, 41 W. Va. 779, 24 S. E. 999.

Nil debit is not a good plea. Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 83. Compare 6 STANDARD PROC. 460 et seq.; 7 STANDARD PROC. 63.

72. Thus a town, suing one who had left an obstruction in the street unguarded whereby another was injured, should set out that it had notice, express or implied, of the existence of the nuisance. The town had compromised and paid the claim without notice to defendant. Fabey v. Town of Harvard, 62 Ill. 28.

And it must be alleged that the person injured was free from negligence contributing to his injury. Catterlin v. City of Frankfort, 79 Ind. 547, 41 Am. Rep. 627.

73. Since he may have been a joint tortfeasor and so not entitled to indemnity, to allege that the accident "was occasioned wholly by the negligence of the defendant" is not sufficient. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Louisville, etc. R. Co., 97 Ky. 128, 30 S. W. 408.

74. Littleton v. Richardson, 34 N. H. 179, 66 Am. Dec. 759.

Defendant is entitled to judgment on the pleadings, where it is not alleged on what ground a general verdict in the prior case was based and from the pleadings and evidence in the prior case it appears that there was at least one ground on which the verdict might have been based, but on which defendant would not have been liable over. City of Omaha v. Armour & Co., 196 Fed. 885, 116 C. C. A. 447.

In such case all that the plaintiff is bound to show is that defendant is liable as being the cause of the liability,⁷³ provided plaintiff has exercised good faith in defending the prior suit.⁷⁷

The one claiming the indemnity cannot go back of the judgment against him to show that it was based upon a different state of facts from those found.⁷⁸

Issues Concluded. — The judgment in the prior suit is conclusive as against one notified to come in and defend, as to the right of plaintiff in that suit to recover, and as to all defenses which could have been set up or were set up and passed upon.⁷⁹ In other words, it is conclusive as to all matters in issue,⁸⁰ but is not conclusive as to matters not adjudicated.⁸¹

If the liability over is not as broad as the original liability the plaintiff in the suit to recover over if he relies on the adjudication made in the former case, must show that the very ground of liability against the indemnitor was found to exist and was necessarily adjudicated in the original suit,⁸² and defendant may show that as a matter of fact he was not responsible for the condition which caused the original liability, where that question was not litigated.⁸³

One claimed to be responsible over may set up any defense which he could not have set up in the former action.⁸⁴

These rules do not, however, permit one to stay out of a case and at the same time dictate to his principal what defense shall be interposed.⁸⁵

Defendant is concluded as to facts found by the jury in the former suit.⁸⁶ The judgment in the prior suit is conclusive as to the cause of the injury and extent of the damage;⁸⁷ and is conclusive so far as the correctness of the judgment is concerned, but is not conclusive as to whether there was such a relationship between the parties as to create a right to indemnity,⁸⁸ unless the jury has found such facts as establish the primary liability.⁸⁹

I. JURISDICTION.—A. OF FEDERAL COURTS.—1. Civil.—a. Over Tribes.—The federal courts have no jurisdiction of actions by or against an Indian tribe, except it be given by specific congressional act.¹ In the Indian Territory, they formerly had jurisdiction of all actions affecting the rights of Indians, except those over which the tribal courts exercised exclusive jurisdiction.²

b. Over Individual Members.—Federal courts have jurisdiction of all cases where an Indian brings suit to enforce his claim to have land allotted to him;³ in all actions in which the ownership, use or possession of land allotted to an Indian is in issue;⁴ in any action for the recovery of personal property issued to an Indian by the United States;⁵ and in any action by an Indian involving his right of exemption from the provisions of a state statute.⁶ But they have only such jurisdiction as has been conferred by statute,⁷ and that is not given merely because an Indian, who is a ward of the government is a party, or his personal rights are involved.⁸

2. Criminal.—The federal courts have jurisdiction over all crimes committed by Indians within a reservation, where jurisdiction has not been reserved to the tribal courts, or vested in territorial or state courts.⁹ Jurisdiction has been conferred on them to try tribal Indians for the crimes of murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to

B. OF COURT OF CLAIMS.—The United States court of claims has jurisdiction of all claims against Indian tribes and the federal government arising out of Indian depredations upon property, taken or destroyed.¹⁵

C. OF STATE COURTS.—1. Civil.—a. Over Tribes.—The state courts have no jurisdiction over Indians in their tribal relations.¹⁷

b. Over Individuals.—State courts have civil jurisdiction generally of actions on contracts made with Indians,¹⁸ and of any action concerning Indian lands not subject to tribal government or federal restrictions, between an Indian and a white citizen,¹⁹ and between Indians.²⁰ They have the same jurisdiction of all actions by and against an Indian allottee under the general allotment act, prior to May 8, 1906, that they would have of actions by or against a white citizen,²¹ except actions affecting the ownership of lands held in trust by the United States for such Indian.²² They have jurisdiction of lands not under Indian government, but held by individual Indians as tenants in common;²³ and of all actions sounding in tort to which an Indian may be a party.²⁴

A state court has jurisdiction of property situated on an Indian reservation where such property belongs to a white man who lives on the reservation by tribal consent.²⁵

2. Criminal.—A state court has jurisdiction of crimes committed

3. Probate.—A state court has no jurisdiction to appoint an administrator for the estate of a tribal Indian, who was residing on a reservation at the time of his death.³¹ It may, however, appoint a legal guardian for minor Indian heirs owning lands in the state.³²

D. OF TERRITORIAL COURTS.—Territorial courts, being vested with the same jurisdiction as the United States district courts in all cases arising under the constitution and laws of the United States,³³ and possessing chancery as well as common law jurisdiction,³⁴ and such jurisdiction as the territorial legislatures may prescribe over all matters and causes, except those in which the United States is a party,³⁵ they usually have jurisdiction of all actions affecting Indians and their property which may be triable in either a federal or state court,³⁶ and of all criminal offenses of which such courts have jurisdiction.³⁷

E. OF TRIBAL COURTS.—Tribal courts were sometimes vested with exclusive jurisdiction of all civil actions between members of the tribe,³⁸ and of all prosecutions for crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian in the Indian country.³⁹ Such jurisdiction extended to persons who had become members of the tribe by adoption, whether of Indian blood or otherwise.⁴⁰ When acquired, it could not be defeated by the subsequent naturalization of the Indian as a citizen of the United States.⁴¹ Such courts had sole jurisdiction of the construction of the tribal laws,⁴² and in the Indian Territory had exclusive jurisdiction of all probate matters.⁴³

Controversies arising between members of one of the five civilized tribes were triable in the tribal court of such tribe,⁴⁴ unless the issues of the case involved the question of ownership of an allotment of land.⁴⁵

Tribal courts are regarded as of similar nature to territorial courts, and their judgments are on the same footing and entitled to the same faith and credit as judgments of territorial courts of the United States,⁴⁶ and cannot be impeached collaterally, except as in the case of a judgment coming from another state or foreign country, the want of jurisdiction may be shown against it.⁴⁷ tribe and band, where such band has received governmental recognition as maintaining separate community existence and interests from those of the tribe from which such band has separated.

[b] Nation, Tribe and Band Defined.—Nation.—A large tribe or group of affiliated tribes possessing a common government, language or racial origin, and acting for the time being, in concert.

Tribe.—A body of Indians of the same or similar race, united in a community under one leadership or government, and inhabiting a particular though sometimes ill-defined territory.

Band.—A company of Indians not necessarily, though usually of the same race or tribe, but united under the same leadership in a common design. While a "band" does not imply the separate racial origin characteristic of a tribe, of which it is usually an offshoot, it does imply a leadership and a concert of action. *Montoya v. By act of congress an Indian may sue and be sued in a federal court in any matter affecting his ownership, use or possession of any land allotted to him,⁶⁴ and he may bring an action in the district court of the United States to enforce his right to have land allotted to him, where such right has been denied.⁶⁵ He has been authorized to bring an action in ejectment in the federal courts under certain circumstances,⁶⁶ and he may recover possession of land held by a non-citizen of the tribe by an action in unlawful detainer.⁶⁷ He may also sue in the federal courts for the recovery of damages for arrest on a charge of violating a state statute.⁶⁸ But he cannot maintain an action to compel the public representative or agent of the Indian tribe to pay a debt which he claims against his tribe.⁶⁹

B. IN STATE COURTS.—A tribal Indian may sue and be sued in a state court in any cause of action⁷⁰ which does not involve a question of ownership, use or possession of any land held in trust by the United States for any party to such action,⁷¹ except for the redress of any wrong committed against his person or property while actually on a reserve excluded from the jurisdiction of the state.⁷² He may sue in a state court for the diversion of water which he has been using on the public domain,⁷³ and may assign his right of action to a white citizen.⁷⁴

An Indian may maintain an action of trespass in such court,⁷⁵ and an action in ejectment,⁷⁶ and he may sue and be sued on any contract not prohibited by federal statute.⁷⁷ An Indian may maintain an action in a state court for damages for false imprisonment.⁷⁸

It has been held that an Indian may maintain a suit for the enforcement of a decree of a tribal court.⁷⁹ An Indian cannot maintain an action to enforce the operation of a treaty made with his tribe.⁸⁰ In some instances authority to sue in a state court has been expressly conferred by legislative act.⁸¹

C. ACTIONS FOR AND ON BEHALF OF INDIVIDUAL INDIANS. — The United States may, as guardian, bring an action in a federal court in behalf of an Indian for the recovery of personal property which has been issued to him by federal authority,⁸² and may maintain an action in ejectment against a third person who has ousted Indian allottees from the possession of land allotted to them under tribal agreement and congressional act.⁸³

The United States may also maintain an action to set aside a conveyance of Indian land made in violation of the restrictions imposed on the same by congress,⁸⁴ or to cancel a lease of land made for a longer period than that authorized by congress,⁸⁵ and may maintain a suit to enjoin the collection of taxes imposed by local authorities on the lands of Indian allottees in violation of the trust agreement.⁸⁶

The United States is a necessary party to an action brought by an Indian to have land allotted to him.¹ An Indian allottee is not a necessary party to a suit by the United States to cancel a lease of such Indian's allotment for a longer term than that authorized by congress.²

In the Indian Territory it was necessary to make the tribe a party to any action in a federal court wherein the tribal property was in any way affected by the issues of the case.³

[a] In an action brought by a telegraph company to restrain persons from erecting telephones in a town on tribal lands in the Indian Territory, it was necessary to make the tribe owning such lands a party to the suit. Muskogee Nat. Tel. Co. v. Hall, 4 Ind. Ter. 18, 64 S. W. 600.

4. [b] General Denial.—In an action for rent under Rev. Laws, 1910, §3802, the question whether the Indian lessor was competent to make a lease without approval of the county court, and the questions as to his age, his quantum of Indian blood, and the alienability of his surplus and homestead allotment, constituted defensive matters not available under a general denial. Mullen v. Howard, 43 Okla. 531, 143 Pac. 659.

[c] Time To Plead.—The time prescribed by statute within which the attorney general shall plead for an Indian tribe and the federal government in an Indian depredation suit is sixty days, but the court may grant such extension of time as it shall deem proper. Labadie v. United States, 31 Ct. Cl. 436.

[d] Authority To Sue.—A complaint, filed in the name of the United States by the Department of Justice, to recover damages for the unlawful occupation of lands within the Ft. Hall Indian reservation by an irrigation company under authority of the secretary of the interior, was subject to demurrer on the ground that no authority to bring such action had been conferred by congress. United States v. Portneuf-Marsh Val. Irr. Co., 213 Fed. 601, 130 C. C. A. 181.

Jurisdictional Facts. — In a depredation claim, the petition must allege the citizenship of the claimant, and the amity of the defendant tribe of Indians, as necessary jurisdictional facts,⁵ and these jurisdictional facts must be tried and determined before either party will be allowed a severance of issues.⁶

VI. JUDGMENT. — A. GENERALLY. — The final judgment of the federal courts in favor of an Indian's right to have land allotted to him has the same effect as the allowance of such allotment by the secretary of the interior.⁷

Where the government sets up a counterclaim against the claimant in an Indian depredation claim the court cannot deduct the amount of the counterclaim from the judgment against the Indians.⁸ Where the judgment on such a claim fails to show which independent tribe of the Indian nation committed the depredation, additional findings of fact may be made for the guidance of the departments of the government.⁹

B. JUDICIAL SALES. — Congress having placed such restrictions on the sale of Indian lands, both tribal and allotments in severalty, as to render void any attempt to sell or make subject to lien of debt any such land,¹⁰ a sale under execution levied against either the tribal lands or any allotment of same to a member of the tribe, is void, unless expressly authorized by statute,¹¹ except improvements made by persons or corporations operating coal or other mines, railroads, or other industries under tribal lease.¹² But personal property owned by Indians by blood can be reached by creditors' suit, and put in the hands of a receiver.¹³

Indian lands upon which the restrictions have expired by limitation, and lands acquired by Indians otherwise than by tribal allotment or United States trust patent, are subject to levy of execution and sale as in case of lands belonging to any other person authorized to own land.¹⁴ A minor Indian's interest in an allotment of land acquired by inheritance may be sold by order of a court.¹⁵

C. EXEMPTIONS. — Allotments of land to Indians in severalty under restrictions as to alienation are "exempt from levy, taxation, sale or forfeiture," and cannot be sold for non-payment of taxes,¹⁶ nor made subject to execution under a judgment for the debts of such allottee,¹⁷ or for improvements placed on such land by another.¹⁸ But the exemption ends with the expiration of the period of in-alienation,¹⁹ or upon the passing of title from the Indian patentee to a citizen or other person capable of taking it.²⁰

VII. NEW TRIAL. — In depredation claims new trial is governed by act of congress.²¹

VIII. SELLING OR FURNISHING LIQUOR. — By act of congress, and by legislative act in some of the states and territories, selling or in anywise furnishing intoxicating liquors to Indians is a criminal offense,²² and an indian who sells or furnishes intoxicating liquors to an Indian is within the contemplation of such statute.²³ And the statute extends to Indian students at the Carlisle school,²⁴ but does not apply to Indians to whom land was allotted in severalty by the government of the United States prior to May 8, 1906,²⁵ except by specific stipulation of treaty.²⁶

[a] The introduction of intoxicating liquors into the Indian Territory (1) was prohibited by federal statutes. 28 St. at L. 693-7; Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663, 32 Sup. Ct. 769, 56 L. ed. 1248; Burch v. United States, 7 Ind. Ter. 284, 104 S. W. 619; United States v. Buckles, 6 Ind. Ter. 319, 97 S. W. 1022; United States v. Cohn, 2 Ind. Ter. 474, 52 S. W. 38. (2) And the enabling act admitting the state of Okla-

It is prohibited by federal statute to introduce into the Indian country, or manufacture or sell, therein, any intoxicating liquors,²⁷ and an Indian who introduces liquor into the Indian country may be convicted for this offense.²⁸ That defendant did not know one to whom he sold liquor was an Indian cannot constitute a defense to a prosecuhoma into the union prohibits the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away or in anywise furnishing intoxicating liquors, wines or beer in that part then known as Indian Territory and the Osage Nation, for a period of twenty-one years from the admission of said state. Evans v. Victor, 204 Fed. 361, 122 C. C. A. 531.

[b] That part of the state of Oklahoma which was the Indian Territory at the time of the passage of the act for the admission of the new state is still subject to the prohibitions of the Act of March 1, 1895, §8, so far as it relates to the carriage of liquor without the state of Oklahoma into that part which was the Indian Territory, except liquors brought in by the state for the use of state agencies. Ex parte Webb, 225 U. [a] The transportation of liquors across an Indian reservation to a place where they may be lawfully sold, does not constitute an introduction of such liquors into the Indian country, and they are not subject to seizure while in transit or after they have reached their destination. United States v. Four Bottles of Sour Mash Whiskey, 90 Fed. 720; United States v. Twenty-nine Gallons of Whisky, etc., 45 Fed. 847.

[b] Right of way through an Indian reservation granted to a railroad by act of congress is not Indian country within the prohibitory act of Jan. 30, 1897. Clairmont v. United States, 225 U. S. 551, 32 Sup. Ct. 787, 56 L. ed. 1201.

[c] It has been held that where, by treaty stipulation, the laws which prohibit the "introduction, manufacture, use of, and traffic in, ardent spirits, wines, or other liquors, in the Indian country, shall continue and be in force within the entire boundaries of the country," until otherwise provided by congress, "it is matter not of judicial, but of legislative discretion, whether the treaty, in view of the small number of Indians entitled to protection as compared with the large population of whites who now form the great majority of inhabitants, and in view of the high state of civilization of the territory, shall not be enforced." Johnson v. Gearlds, 234 U. S. 422, 34 Sup. Ct. 794.

[d] The Indian country referred to in the acts of congress includes only those lands originally occupied by Indians, which were not within any existing state at the time of the adoption of the Act of Congress of June 30, 1834, which gives this definition. Benson v. United States, 44 Fed. 178.

I. NATURE AND NECESSITY OF.—A. INDICTMENT.—1. Definition and General Consideration.—Various definitions of the term indictment are to be found in the works of law writers¹ and in the decisions² and the statutes and codes of the various states.³

It may be defined to be a written accusation presented by a grand jury under oath to the proper court and in the form prescribed by law, charging a person therein named with a crime.⁴

3. Ia.—Code, §2915. Ky.—Crim. Code, §118. Minn.—Code, §5278.

[a] "An indictment is an accusation in writing, presented by a grand jury to a competent court, charging a person with a crime." New York Code Crim. Proc., §254.

[b] An indictment is a written accusation of the grand jury accusing a person therein named of some act or omission which by law is declared to be an offense. Tex. Code Crim. Proc., §419.

4. See authorities cited in preceding notes.

[a] An indictment within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the United States constitution is the presentation to the proper court, under oath, by a grand jury duly impaneled of a charge describing an offense against the law for which the party charged may be punished. Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 781, 30 L. ed. 849.

[b] Derivation of the Word.—"Indictment cometh of the French word enditer, and signifieth in law an accusation found upon an inquest of twelve or more upon their oath." Quoting from 3 Coke Litt. 553. Mose v. State, 35 Ala. 421.

[c] Distinguished From Declaration. A declaration is a statement of his cause of action by the party himself or his counsel not under oath. An indictment is a statement of the facts which constitute the alleged offense against the public, on the part of the accused, made under oath by a grand jury and which to be good in law must have certain formalities. The one is good even though it be not signed by counsel. The other is nothing if it does not bear the name of the foreman of the grand jury and the words "a true bill." John v. State, 2 Ala. 290; Bradshaw v. Com., 16 Gratt. (Va.) 507, 86 Am. Dec. 722.

[d] Differs From Presentment at Common Law.—The chief distinction between an indictment and a presentment at common law was that the former was made upon knowledge of one or more of the jurors, and instead of being endorsed "a true bill" by the foreman alone was signed by all the jurors. In re Grosbois, 109 Cal. 445, 42 Pac. 444; Jones v. People, 101 App. Div. 55, 92 N. Y. Supp. 275. And see charge of Mr. Justice Field to the grand jury in 2 Sawy. 667, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,255: "A presentment differs from an indictment in that it wants technical form, and is usually found by the grand jury upon their own knowledge, or upon the evidence before them, without having any bill from the public prosecutor. It is an informal accusation, which is generally regarded in the light of instructions upon which an indictment can be framed."

Nature and Purpose of Indictment.—An indictment, therefore, implies the finding of a legally constituted grand jury,⁵ and is designed to inform the person charged of the fact and nature and scope of the accusation.⁶

2. When Indictment Proper or Necessary.—a. At Common Law. Indictment at common law is a general remedy for the redress of public injuries,⁷ and in the absence of statutory provision changing the rule, it may be invoked in every case where an offense is committed contra bonos mores, whether such offense amount to treason, felony or misdemeanor.⁸ Moreover, where the crime is of the grade of felony, it cannot be prosecuted otherwise than by indictment.⁹

[e] An accusation differs from an indictment in that the former is delivered to the district attorney; the latter presented in open court. Again, the proceedings on an indictment and the consequences following a judgment thereon are entirely different from those accompanying the trial on an accusation. In re Burleigh, 145 Cal. 35, 78 Pac. 242.

[f] An indictment is not so called until it has been found "a true bill" by a grand jury. Before that time it is termed a bill only. Bd. of County Comrs. v. Graham, 4 Colo. 201.

indictment should so identify the offense that the defendant if acquitted or convicted, can plead the judgment in bar of any future prosecution for the same crime. United States v. Loring, 91 Fed. 881.

[b] The accusation is the very gist and essence of an indictment and without it there can not legally or truthfully be said to be any indictment; it is as though the sheet of paper was entirely blank. Vanvickle v. State, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 625, 2 S. W. 642.

b. Under Constitutions and Statutes.—(I.) Federal Constitution. There are provisions in the federal constitution and in the constitutions of many of the states bearing upon the prosecution of crimes. The former, of course, are not designed to regulate the procedure in state courts, but are limitations upon the tribunals of the federal government¹⁰ and those of the territories¹¹ and the District of Columbia.¹²

Such, for example, is the scope of the fifth amendment to the United States constitution which requires that capital or otherwise infamous offenses be prosecuted by indictment or presentment of a grand jury,¹³ and of the fourth amendment to the effect that no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or [a] Meaning of "Due Process of Law."—"Its (14th amendment) design was not to confine the states to a particular mode of procedure in judicial proceedings and prohibit them from prosecuting for felonies by information, instead of by indictment, if they chose to abolish the grand jury system. And the words 'due process of law,' in this amendment, do not mean and have not the effect to limit the powers of the state governments to prosecutions for crimes by indictments, but these words do mean law in its regular course of administration according to the prescribed forms and in accordance with the general rules for the protection of individual rights." Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559.

[a] A state act authorizing courts to determine whether prosecutions shall be by information or by indictment is not an abridgment of the privileges and immunities of the citizens. State v. Little Whirlwind, 22 Mont. 425, 56 Pac. 820.

[b] A law allowing felonies to be prosecuted by information does not their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.¹⁸

(II.) State Constitution and Statutes.—(A.) INDICTMENT FOR HIGHER CRIMES.—Many state constitutions contain provisions relative to criminal procedure. Necessarily, where these either in terms¹⁹ or by implication²⁰ require an indictment or presentment in the prosecution of certain offenses, it is not within the power of the legislature to dispense therewith. Nor can the accused himself in such cases, by consent, or otherwise, confer jurisdiction upon the court where the form of accusation is contrary to the constitutional requirement.²¹

Indictment or presentment have, by a few constitutions, been made necessary in every criminal charge.²² More often, however, it is conflict with this amendment. State v. Brett, 16 Mont. 360, 40 Pac. 873.

People*, 13 Colo. 155, 21 Pac. 1120, 4 L. R. A. 803. Ore.—State v. Tucker, 36 Ore. 291, 61 Pac. 894, 51 L. R. A. 246. Wis.—Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559.

[b] An indictment is not required by a constitutional provision giving the accused a right to be informed of the charge against him and to a copy of the indictment. State v. Glenn, 54 Md. 572.

[c] A provision of the state constitution that "the constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land," has reference only to matters wherein the general government assumes to control the individual states, and does not prevent the legislature from dispensing with indictments. In re Bafferty, 1 Wash. 382, 25 Pac. 465.

[e] The constitutional guaranty of trial by jury does not include the right to demand an indictment by grand jury. Gordon v. State, 102 Ga. 673, 29 S. E. 444.

B. PRESENTMENT. — 1. Definition and General Consideration.

A presentment is an informal statement in writing by the grand jury, made on their own motion either on their own knowledge or on evidence before them, representing to the court that a public offense has been committed, and that there is reasonable ground for believing that a particular individual named or described therein has committed it.⁴⁸

[a] “If we regard the term ‘presentment’ in its stricter meaning as an accusation of the grand jury sua sponte, or as Judge Story puts it, ‘an accusation made ex mero motu,’ as distinguished from an indictment which was a written accusation preferred to the grand jury and presented upon oath at the instance of government, then I agree that it is not a final accusation—the alternative, so to speak, of an indictment. For a presentment was regarded as the basis of an indictment. The distinction does not now often practically appear, inasmuch as the grand jury is rarely the origin of accusation, as was its prototype under the Assize of Clarendon . . . , though

2. When Presentment Proper or Necessary.—At common law, an offender was generally not put upon trial upon a presentment; it served merely as the basis for an indictment.⁴⁹ But in some jurisdictions a presentment is regarded as a final accusation upon which prosecution may be based, and is thus in effect the same as an indictment.⁵⁰

The right of the grand jury to make presentments of offenses generally is recognized in some states, as part of their common law;⁵¹ in others it exists by virtue of statute;⁵² while in a few states presentment has either been expressly abolished⁵³ or else is recognized only in a limited sense.⁵⁴ power to act ex mero motu is preserved in section 259 of our Code of Criminal Procedure.” Jones v. People, 101 App. Div. 55, 92 N. Y. Supp. 275.

State*, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 396.

[b] In Virginia the presentment has in itself the character of a criminal proceeding until it is embodied and merged in an indictment for the same offense, or in an information filed upon it, and may stand in the place of an indictment on which the prosecution for a misdemeanor may proceed, without indictment or information. Com. v. Christian, 7 Gratt. 631; Com. v. Towles, 5 Leigh 743.

[a] Presentment is unknown in New York, but “sometimes, however, our grand juries make a sort of general presentment of evil and evil things, to call public attention to them, yet not as instructions for any specific indictment. No one could be called to answer to such a presentment.” In re Gardiner, 31 Misc. 364, 64 N. Y. Supp. 760.

An information is a written accusation of crime against a person or persons, filed by a public officer, without the intervention of a grand jury.⁵⁵

The common law of England recognized two kinds of information. The one which was filed by the attorney general without leave of the court⁵⁶ has generally been adopted in the United States.⁵⁷

2. When Information Proper or Necessary. — a. At Common Law. At the common law informations were not allowed for capital crimes nor for felonies, but solely for misdemeanors.⁵⁸

55. State v. Starling, 15 S. C. 120; State v. Corbit, 42 Tex. 88.

[a] Filed by Private Prosecutor. An information exhibited under the common law by leave of the court by a private prosecutor is in effect merely a complaint within the provision of the constitution allowing prosecution by complaint for misdemeanors. Evans v. Willis, 22 Okla. 310, 97 Pac. 1047, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1050.

[b] At common law an information was a surmise or suggestion upon record made on behalf of the sovereign to a court of criminal jurisdiction charging a person with the commission of a misdemeanor. United States v. Tureaud, 20 Fed. 621.

[c] A prosecution by information means a prosecution instituted by some officer whose duty it is to prosecute criminal offenses, and the affidavit of a private individual is not an information. State v. Shortell, 93 Mo. 123, 5 S. W. 691; State v. Kelm, 79 Mo. 515.

[b] "It appears to have been the common and usual practice, sustained by numerous precedents, for informations to be exhibited, whether in the name of the King's Attorney General, or of the master of the crown office, for batteries, cheats, seducing a young man or woman from their parents in order to marry them against their consent, or for other wicked purposes, spiriting away a child, rescuing persons from legal arrest, perjuries, subornation of perjuries, forgery, conspiracies and other like crimes done principally to a private person, as well as for offenses done principally to the

b. Under Constitutions and Statutes.—(I.) United States Constitution. As already noted, by the fifth amendment to the United States constitution, capital or otherwise infamous crimes cannot be prosecuted by information in the federal courts, or those of the territories or the District of Columbia. (II.) State Constitutions and Statutes.—In many of the states constitutional provisions limit or discountenance informations.⁶⁰ On the other hand information is by the constitutions or statutes of some states made a concurrent remedy with indictment, it being within the discretion of the prosecuting attorney which to pursue.⁶¹

The use of information is sometimes confined to offenses not capital,⁶² or to offenses that are neither capital nor entail imprisonment for a specified period, such as for life,⁶³ or for a number of years.⁶⁴

Where a preliminary examination is necessary the offense charged in the indictment must be the one for which the defendant is held to answer by the examining court.⁹⁹

A second preliminary examination is not necessary as a basis of a second indictment charging the same offense.¹

4. Leave of Court.—In some jurisdictions the prosecuting attorney should ordinarily submit a bill to the grand jury only upon order or by leave of court.² It is not necessary that such order show cause

While, however, the possession of this exceptional power by prosecuting officers cannot be denied, its employment can only be justified by some pressing and adequate necessity. When exercised without such necessity, or merely to suit the convenience, the pleasure or other private purpose of the prosecutor, it is the duty of the court to set the officer’s act aside. In such cases, that is, where the indictment is sent up by the district attorney without first obtaining the leave of the court, the discretion of the court may be invoked, and is exercisable upon a motion to quash.” *Com. v. it essential that the grand jury shall have been organized on the first day of the term.²¹

2. In Vacation.—But an indictment should not be found by a grand jury convened in vacation,²² unless by express statutory provision.²³

Delay in Finding.—Under the modern rules of criminal procedure the accused is entitled to a speedy trial and with this end in view some of the states have declared it to be necessary that the indictment or information be filed within a certain number of days after the accused is held to answer,²⁴ or during the term at which he has been held to answer,²⁵ or before the end of the second term²⁶ in some

21. Acts requiring the court to impanel the grand jury on the first day of the term are directory, and the fact that the jury is impaneled on a subsequent day does not render the indictment invalid. State v. Dillard, 35 La. Ann. 1049; State v. Davis, 14 La. Ann. 678.

22. Miller v. State, 69 Ind. 284. But see State v. Hunter, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 597.

23. By statute the court in certain emergencies may convene a grand jury in vacation time. Holman v. State, 79 Ga. 155, 4 S. E. 8.

24. Indictment must be found within thirty days after the accused is held to answer. People v. Quijada, 154 Cal. 243, 97 Pac. 689; People v. Wickham, 113 Cal. 283, 48 Pac. 123; State v. Reynolds, 24 Utah 29, 66 Pac. 614.

[a] The object of the statutory provision that a person held to answer shall be indicted at the next term of the court is to protect the citizen from imprisonment upon insufficient cause, such provision has no bearing upon the validity of an indictment found at a subsequent term. State v. Lambert, 9 Nev. 321.

[b] In Minnesota.—If the magistrate has concurrent jurisdiction of the offense he may either bind the prisoner over to answer to the higher court or he may enter a conviction, but under the state constitution providing for a speedy trial, unless the grand jury is in session at the time the accused is committed or will meet shortly afterwards, it is an abuse of the powers of the committing magistrate to hold the accused to await the action of the grand jury in such a case and the accused is entitled to redress by habeas corpus. State ex rel Thurston v. Sargent, 71 Minn. 28, 73 N. W. 626, the court saying: "If the complaint before the committing magistrate charges a crime of which a justice of the peace would not have jurisdiction (as it usually does) a new complaint would have to be filed, charging only the grade of crime shown by the evidence, in order to give the justice jurisdiction to try the accused. But, instead of filing such new complaint before the justice, the prosecution may prefer to present the matter to the grand jury, and if this causes no unreasonable delay the accused cannot complain. But if it causes such delay, he can complain."

states; otherwise the prisoner will be discharged from custody.²²

IV. RETURN, FILING AND RECORD.—A. OF INDICTMENT.

1. Return.—a. Manner of Return.—After an indictment has been found by the grand jury and indorsed a true bill, it must then²³ be

Boggs' Case, 84 Va. 492, 5 S. E. 364.

[c] When during a term of the court accused is sent on for indictment, that term is not considered one of the two terms at which he must be indicted. Glover v. Com., 86 Va. 382, 10 S. E. 420.

[d] A statute providing that two "no bills" shall be a bar to another indictment unless they have been procured by fraud does not authorize the discharge of the accused from the crime upon the finding "no bill" by two successive grand juries. Christmas v. State, 53 Ga. 81.

27. Bennett v. State, 27 Tex. 701.

[a] The defendant is entitled to be discharged at end of term when no indictment is found against him, providing the grand jury heard evidence against him during the term. People v. Hessing, 28 Ill. 410; Cerny v. State, 62 Neb. 626, 87 N. W. 336; Leisenberg v. State, 60 Neb. 628, 84 N. W. 6.

[b] But if, at a subsequent term of the court an information is filed, and defendant pleads not guilty, the court has power to try the issue raised; and, after verdict of conviction has been rendered, it is not error to deny a motion in arrest of judgment. Cerny v. State, 62 Neb. 626, 87 N. W. 336, citing with approval Leisenberg v. State, 60 Neb. 628, 84 N. W. 6.

[c] Discharge From Custody Only. Under a statute authorizing the court to discharge a defendant from imprisonment if an indictment shall not be presented to the grand jury at the next session, the court cannot discharge him generally, but only from imprisonment. Wentzel's Appeal, 160 Pa. 252, 28 Atl. 694. See also Ex parte Job, 17 Nev. 184, 30 Pac. 699; State v. Garthwaite, 23 N. J. L. 143. But see Ex parte McGehan, 22 Ohio St. 442; State v. Fasket, 5 Rich. L. (S. C.) 255.

[d] State v. Buyek, 2 Bay (S. C.) 563, held that an accused admitted to bail was not entitled to his discharge under the habeas corpus act where he was not in actual confinement though if he had been confined in prison the court would have admitted him to bail if no bill had been found against him at the first term.

[e] Accused Should Show That Charge Was Investigated.—Where one who has been committed to jail by a justice of the peace on a criminal charge seeks to be discharged from custody by habeas corpus proceedings on the ground that the grand jury had adjourned without finding a bill of indictment against him, he should show in addition that the charge against him was fully investigated by the grand jury. Ex parte Jefferson, 62 Miss. 223, the court saying: "The 'speedy trial' guaranteed by the constitution does not operate to deprive the state of a reasonable opportunity of fairly prosecuting criminals. It must be presumed in the absence of testimony that the justice of the peace performed his duty and that a preliminary examination was waived."

[f] Where Accused Became a Fugitive.—One who has been admitted to bail after a preliminary examination on a criminal charge, and who becomes a fugitive, is not, after his return or apprehension, entitled to be discharged because no information was filed against him at the term at which he was recognized to appear, and while he was a fugitive. Ex parte Trester, 53 Neb. 148, 73 N. W. 545.

[a] An indictment is not found until it is presented to the court, and there received and filed. People v. Oishei, 20 Misc. 163, 45 N. Y. Supp. 49; People v. Flaherty, 110 N. Y. Supp. 154.

[b] Mode and Effect of Return.—In Com. v. Cawood, 2 Va. Cas. 527-541 (cited in Renigar v. United States, 172 Fed. 646, 97 C. C. A. 172, 26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 683), the court said: "If they (the grand jury) find it so (to be a true bill) the foreman of the grand jury indorses on it 'A True Bill,' and signs his name as foreman, and then the bill is brought into court by the whole grand jury, and in open court it is publicly delivered to the clerk, who records the fact. It is necessary that it should be presented publicly by the grand jury; that is the evidence required by law to prove that it is sanctioned by the accusing body, and until it is so presented by the grand jury, with the indorsement aforesaid, the party charged by it is not indicted, nor is he required or bound to answer any charge against him which is not so presented."

[c] "1 Chitty Crim. Law 324, describes the mode in which the grand jury returns the results of their inquiries to the court, by indorsing 'A True Bill' if found, and 'Not a True Bill' if rejected; and says, 'When the jury have made these indorsements on the bills, they bring them publicly into court, and the clerk of the peace at sessions or clerk of assize on the circuit, calls all the jurymen by name, who severally answer to signify that they are present, and then the clerk of the peace or assize asks the jury whether they agreed upon any bills, and bids them present them to the court, and then the foreman of the jury hands the indictments to the clerk of the peace or clerk of assize.'" Renigar v. United States, 172 Fed. 646, 97 C. C. A. 172, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 683; Sampson v. State, 124 Ga. 776, 53 S. E. 332, 4 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 525.

[d] Presentation to Judge.—An indorsement upon the indictment that it was presented to the presiding judge, etc., is a compliance with the code requiring it to be presented to the court. Hannegan v. State, 5 Ala. App. 142, 59 So. 376.

[e] The order of court is the only legitimate evidence of the presentation of the indictment to the court. Com. v. English, 6 Bush (Ky.) 431.

[f] Due Return Is Jurisdictional See People v. Blackwell, 27 Cal. 65, holding that it is a matter of jurisdictional consequence that the indictment should in fact be presented by the foreman of the grand jury and in their presence.

[a] Where a bill of indictment had been mislaid until after the grand jury had been discharged and then brought into court by a grand juror who had discovered it, it was held in Queen v. Thompson, 1 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 268, that there had been no presentation.

[b] Return by Solicitor-General. "When a grand jury as a body present themselves in open court and the solicitor-general acts merely, in presence of the court and public, as the man,³⁰ in their presence,³¹ or in the presence of such number as is prescribed by statute.³²

In some states, however, it is not necessary that the grand jury be present in court when the return is made, but the foreman alone³³ medium of transmission between the jury and clerk there is nothing improper; . . . but the matter is far different when the solicitor-general undertakes to receive in private . . . and brings them (indictments) into court during the absence of the jury from the court room." Bowen v. State, 81 Ga. 482, 8 S. E. 736.

State*, 1 Kan. 313, holding that although the record does not show the indictment was presented by the foreman, "It might well be inferred from the record that that body (the grand jury) acted through their proper officer, the foreman. But it is unimportant, as it could make no difference to the accused whether it was handed in by the foreman or some other member of the body in their presence."

Ct. 1, 57 L. ed. 97, in which the foreman returned the indictment into court alone, the grand jury remaining in the ante-room where they could have seen his actions had they so desired, it was held that an objection to the return first raised after the expiration of the term and after plea came too late.

32. See statutes of various states.

For a treatment of the number of grand jurors who must be present and concur in the finding of an indictment, see the title "Grand Jury," 10 STANDARD PROC. 648, 656.

[a] In Alabama the code requires all indictments to be presented to the court by the foreman in the presence of at least eleven other members of the grand jury. McCuller v. State, 49 Ala. 39.

[b] A record stating that the indictment was returned by the grand jury shows that twelve if not the entire body performed this service. Parnell v. State, 129 Ala. 6, 29 So. 860.

[c] In Louisiana the grand jury consists of twelve members and nine must concur to find an indictment. In such case when an indictment is presented to the court it is only necessary that nine be present. State v. Griggsby, 117 La. 1046, 42 So. 497.

[d] In Mississippi, the indictment must be presented in the presence of at least twelve of the grand jury. Pond v. State, 47 Miss. 39.

[e] In New York it is provided by statute that "the presence of at least sixteen (of the grand jury) is necessary for the transaction of any business," and in consequence thereof at least sixteen members of the grand jury must be present at the presentation of the indictment. People v. Herrmans, 69 Misc. 303, 125 N. Y. Supp. 143.

[f] In Tennessee, twelve only of the grand jury are necessary to concur in the finding of the indictment and consequently at least twelve must be present at the return thereof. Chappel v. State, 8 Yerg. 166.

[g] In Texas nine grand jurors constitute a quorum and this number is sufficient to return an indictment. Smith v. State, 19 Tex. App. 95 108.

may return the bill, or it may be returned by the bailiff.³⁴

b. Time for Return.—An indictment returned at a time other than that provided by law is invalid.³⁵

2. Indorsement and Filing.—When an indictment has been returned and presented to the court, it should be endorsed³⁶ and filed³⁷ by the clerk,³⁸ but this need not be done in open court. The failure of the clerk to file the indictment, however, will not invalidate it, or the proceedings thereunder.³⁹

Statutes generally require the clerk to indorse his file mark upon the indictment,⁴⁰ but such a requirement is merely directory.⁴¹

[a] In North Carolina subsequent to 1889. Revisal, §3242. Cases decided prior to 1889 holding indictment must be returned by the foreman in the presence of the grand jury. State v. Bordeaux, 93 N. C. 560; State v. Cox, 28 N. C. 440.

[a] In Georgia by a provision of the code the bailiff is substituted "for the grand jury as the medium for returning the indictments and presentments found by that body to the court," but he too is required to return the indictment into open court: Sampson v. State, 124 Ga. 776, 53 S. E. 332, 4 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 525; Barlow v. State, 127 Ga. 58, 56 S. E. 131.

Glover*, 3 Greene (Iowa) 249, holding that the filing is indispensable and a failure to file is fatal. But see Code, §2916, and State v. Axt, 6 Iowa 511, holding the statute upon which the Glover case is based is merely directory. See also State v. Jolly, 7 Iowa 15.

[a] In State v. Clark, 18 Mo. 432, it was held that "the failure of the clerk to enter the day of the return of the indictment by the grand jury into court, could not authorize the court to discharge the defendant."

40. Where the minutes of the evidence are attached to the indictment, one file mark suffices for the whole. State v. Ottley, 147 Iowa 329-332, 126 N. W. 334; State v. Doss, 110 Iowa 713-717, 80 N. W. 1069. And see State v. Cross, 95 Iowa 629, 64 N. W. 614; State v. Craig, 78 Iowa 637, 43 N. W. 462; State v. Briggs, 68 Iowa 416, 27 N. W. 358 (holding it to be unnecessary that the minutes of evidence returned with the indictment be endorsed filed by the clerk. His endorsement is evidence only of the filing).

[a] Indorsement by Stranger in Presence of Clerk.—It is no objection to an indictment that the indorsements upon the indictment were made by a stranger in the presence and under the direction of the clerk. Jackson v. State, 55 Miss. 530.

[b] In Nevada the indorsement of the clerk upon the indictment of the fact of its presentation, filing, etc., although useful and proper, is not prescribed by law. State v. Harris, 12 Nev. 414-419.

[a] The failure of the indorsement on the indictment to state that it was

Mere clerical errors in the indorsement do not affect the validity of the indictment.⁴² The indorsement may be made by the clerk at any time while the cause is in fieri.⁴³

"Filing Away" Indictments.—In Kentucky if the court or the prosecution should desire to retain control of the case after the term, it may be done by an order filing the indictment away, to be re-docketed on motion of the commonwealth.⁴⁴

3. Record.—a. As to Impaneling and Organization of Grand Jury.—Although there are authorities apparently to the contrary,⁴⁵ filed in open court does not authorize a dismissal of the indictment. Schroufe v. Com., 141 Ky. 554, 133 S. W. 205; Pence v. Com., 95 Ky. 618, 26 S. W. 810; Com. v. Stegala, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 142.

[b] Where the record shows a due return (1) of the indictment, a failure of the clerk to sign the indorsement on the back that it was filed in open court will not authorize a dismissal of the indictment (Com. v. Stegala, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 142), (2) and is not ground for reversal. Williams v. State, 168 Ind. 87, 93, 79 N. E. 1079.

[a] See State v. Smouse, 50 Iowa 43, holding an indictment presented in the proper court and properly filed therein, is not invalid because of an endorsement thereon reciting that it was found in another county.

[b] In State v. Jackson, 106 La. 189-192, 30 So. 309, an objection to the indorsement showing date of receipt and filing as on "January 24-901" was held to be without force, especially as the error was cured by a proper entry in the minutes showing the date to have been "January 24, 1901."

[c] Statute requiring the clerk to make a minute of "the true day, month, and year," when presented in court upon all indictments does not require that the name of the month should appear in the minute, if from the records of the whole term, it admits of no doubt at what time the minute was made. State v. Bartlett, 11 Vt. 650.

43. Stanley v. State, 88 Ala. 154, 7 So. 273; Hubbard v. State, 72 Ala. 164; Wesley v. State, 52 Ala. 182.

[a] This practice should not be indulged where the accused has been served with process and objects to the order; and an order "filing away" is sufficiently final to be appealable. Jones v. Com., 114 Ky. 599, 71 S. W. 643.

45. Harriman v. State, 2 Greene (Iowa) 270-278.

[a] The record need not show the due organization of the grand jury, it being enough if it appears "that the grand jury came into court and presented an indictment in due form." From this entry, in the absence of specific objection and of affirmative proof to the contrary, it will be presumed the grand jury was properly organized. State v. Tazwell, 30 La. Ann. 884. See also State v. Watson, 31 La. Ann. 379. But see State v. Shields, 83 La. Ann. 991, holding that where a record shows nothing with regard to the finding of the indictment, the impaneling of the grand jury, the appointing of the foreman, or the due presentation by the grand jury, it would not be presumed these necessary requirements had been fulfilled.

[b] Presumption as to Grand Jury. Although the clerk should have entered the names of the grand jurors in the record and the fact of their being duly impaneled, sworn, and charged, yet where the record is silent regularity is presumed and it will be presumed there was a legal grand jury of twelve men. State v. Vaughn, 132 Mo. App. 135, 112 S. W. 728. See also Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491; Holloway v. State, 53 Ind. 554; Long v. State, 46 Ind. 582. See Bailey v. State, 39 Ind. 438-449.

the general rule is that the record should in some way affirmatively show the due impaneling and organization of the grand jury.⁴⁶

The names of the grand jurors sworn and impaneled should be set out⁴⁷

[a] The indictment reciting that it was presented in the court of the proper county by the grand jury of said county, duly elected, impaneled, sworn and charged as such, it is presumed the indictment was presented by a legal grand jury of the proper county. De Olles v. State, 20 Tex. App. 145.

[b] Recitals in the indictment as copied into the record, to the effect that the grand jury were duly impaneled, sworn and charged, are sufficient to show the due organization of the grand jury. Stout v. State, 93 Ind. 150; Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 144; Lovell v. State, 45 Ind. 550; Bailey v. State, 39 Ind. 438; Weinzorpflin v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 186. See also Henning v. State, 106 Ind. 386, 6 N. E. 803, 7 N. E. 4, 55 Am. Rep. 756.

[c] An indorsement upon the indictment of a true bill, signed by the foreman of the grand jury, is insufficient to show the organization of the grand jury. Parmer v. State, 41 Ala. 416.

[d] Swearing of Foreman.—In Roe v. State (Ala.), 2 So. 459, it was held that where a record showed that the foreman had been appointed and then recited that the remainder of the jurors were sworn, and thereby failed to show the swearing of the foreman, the grand jury were not legally organized, and the indictment was invalid.

[e] Presumption Grand Jury Were Duly Summoned.—Under a statute requiring the grand jury to be summoned pursuant to an order of the court, where a record states that the grand jury was impaneled, it will be presumed they were summoned as provided by statute. Bell v. State, 42 Ind. 335.

[f] Venire Facias.—Neither the fact that a venire facias had been issued to summon the grand jury nor the return thereon need affirmatively appear upon the record. Curtis v. Com., 87 Va. 589, 13 S. E. 73.

[g] Presumption of Qualification of Jurors.—“It was not necessary to specify the qualifications of the (grand) jurors, or to allege that they were good and lawful men. All this must be presumed” when the record comes from a superior court. Weinzorpflin v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 186; Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 299. See Willey v. State, 46 Ind. 363; Turns v. Com., 6 Metc. (Mass.) 224-235.

[h] The record need not show that the court performed the duty of ascertaining the qualifications of the grand jurors. James v. State, 53 Ala. 380.

[i] Term For Which Impaneled. See Holton v. State, 2 Fla. 476-505; Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491.

[j] The proceedings as to the drawing of the grand jury need not be shown by the record. Collier v. State, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 388; State v. Howard, 10 Iowa 101.

[k] The fact that the proceedings had in drawing the jury were not incorporated in the record is not such an irregularity as would invalidate the indictment, for such proceedings can be recorded after the finding of the indictment without affecting its validity. Tervin v. State, 37 Fla. 396-404, 20 So. 551.

47. Fla.—See Holton v. State, 2 Fla. 476-505. Miss.—Mulligan v. State, 47 Miss. 304. Mo.—State v. Vaughn, 132 Mo. App. 135, 112 S. W. 728. Ohio.—Mahan v. State, 10 Ohio 232. Eng.—Faulkner's Case, 1 Saund. 248-250.

Appointment of Foreman.—It has been held that the record need not show the appointment of a foreman,⁴⁹ although better practice would seem to require it.⁵⁰

Fact of Swearing Grand Jury.—The record must contain an entry that the grand jury were sworn.⁵¹ A statement that they were duly sworn is sufficient to show that they were sworn in the manner provided by law.⁵²

b. Record of the Finding.—The record must show that the indict-

[b] A record sufficiently shows the number and names of the grand jurors where their names are written in the minute book of the clerk and the indorsement upon the indictment is signed by them. State v. O'Brien, 18 R. I. 105, 25 Atl. 910.

[c] Where a record of the swearing shows the names of the grand jurors, a subsequent entry, showing the return of the indictment, need not repeat their names. State v. Vincent, 91 Mo. 662, 4 S. W. 430.

[d] Variance in Name.—Objection to insufficient setting out of names of the grand jurors in the record is untenable though the record includes "A. J. Moore" among the grand jurors and states "Andrew J. Moore," was appointed foreman. Stone v. State, 30 Ind. 115.

[e] Where the name James Langford appeared in the jury book and James Lankford in the list of jurors, the variance is immaterial. State v. Mahan, 12 Tex. 283.

48. Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491; Harriman v. State, 2 Greene (Iowa) 270-278.

[a] Omission of Name of Grand Juror.—The omission of the name of one of the grand jurors who were "duly impaneled, sworn and charged" from the record recital of the formation of the grand jury, will not invalidate the indictment. Tanner v. State, 92 Ala. 1, 9 So. 613.

[a] The record need not show that the person signing the indorsement on the indictment was the grand jury's foreman. Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491.

[b] A record stating "that a grand jury was empanelled and sworn to inquire in and for the body of the county of Warren, to wit, Joseph Castleman, foreman, etc.," sufficiently shows the appointment of foreman. Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 247-254.

[c] A recital in the record of the fact that B— was sworn as foreman necessarily implies his appointment by the court. Woodside v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655.

[d] Presumption as to Appointment of Foreman.—The fact of the appointment of a foreman of the grand jury should be recited in the record, but if the record is silent it will be presumed that the proceedings were regular and that a foreman had been duly appointed. State v. Vaughn, 132 Mo. App. 135, 112 S. W. 728.

[a] That the oath was first administered to the foreman, and then to the others will be presumed from an entry that the grand jurors were duly sworn. State v. Weaver, 104 N. C. 758, 10 S. E. 486. See also Shields v. People, 132 Ill. App. 109-125.

[b] Particular Oath Need Not Be Set Out.—O'Donnell v. People, 224 Ill. 218, 79 N. E. 639. See Pierce v. State, 12 Tex. 210.

[c] Time When Sworn.—If a record shows that the grand jury were ment against the defendant has been found a true bill,⁵³ and the omission of such an entry cannot be supplied by a recital in any entry nunc pro tunc or otherwise,⁵⁴ or by a recital that he stands indicted,⁵⁵ or by a plea of not guilty;⁵⁶ nor can it be supplied by intendment or presumption.⁵⁷ But it has been held that a special entry of the find-sworn, it will be presumed that they were "then and there" sworn. Wood-sides v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655.

53. Ill.—Gardner v. People, 4 Ill. 83. Ia.—Harriman v. State, 2 Greene 270. Miss.—Wood-sides v. State, 2 How. 655. N. C.—State v. Brown, 81 N. C. 568. Tenn.—*Canupp v. Va. 773; State v. Gilmore, 9 W. Va. 641, 645; State v. Fitzpatrick, 8 W. Va. 707. But see People v. Lee, 2 Utah 441.

[b] Form of Record.—In State v. Guilford, 49 N. C. 83, approved in State v. Harwood, 60 N. C. 226, it was held that the following form was sufficient, "and thereupon by the oath of" (18 persons naming them) "good and lawful men, of the county aforesaid, then and there drawn from the said venire, and then and there empannelled and sworn, and charged to enquire for the State, of, and concerning, all crimes and offences committed within the body of the said county, it is presented in manner and form following: that is to say," setting out the bill of indictment at large.

[c] Word "Indorsed" Unnecessary. The indorsement is no part of the indictment further than as a mark of identification, but the record of the finding by the grand jury is made up from the indorsement. Hence a record showing that the indictment had been returned into court a true bill signed by S—foreman, without using the word indorsed is sufficient record of the finding. State v. Thacker Coal & Coke Co., 49 W. Va. 140, 38 S. E. 539.

[d] By Requisite Number.—The return of an indictment indorsed "a true bill" is sufficient evidence that the statutory number of grand jurors concurred in finding the indictment. Lanekton v. United States, 18 App. Cas. (D. C.) 348; Guy v. State, 37 Ind. App. 691, 77 N. E. 855.

[e] The words "indictment filed" and the entry "a true bill" upon the calendar or calendar list, prepared for the use of the judge are insufficient as a record of the finding of the indictment. United States v. Levally, 36 Fed. 687.

[f] Defendants Not Named.—A record which states that two indictments against surveyors of roads are found true bills by the grand jury, without naming the surveyors, is not a sufficient record of the finding against any particular surveyors. Com. v. Snider, 2 Leigh (Va.) 744.

[g] But by statute in Mississippi the indorsements required to be made by the clerk are exclusive evidence of the finding and return of the indictment. Stanford v. State, 76 Miss. 257, 24 So. 536.

[h] The date of the finding of the indictment need not be specified in the record. State v. McGuire, 87 Iowa 142, 54 N. W. 202.

[i] Term at Which Found.—It was held in Price v. Com., 21 Gratt. (Va.) 846, that it was not necessary that the record show at what term the indictment is found. Where an indictment was found by a grand jury of eight members it will be presumed that the indictment was found at a term when only eight persons were necessary to constitute a grand jury.

54. Hite v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 198-294.

ing is unnecessary, it being sufficient if the record shows the return of an indictment,⁵⁸ and that the endorsement of the foreman upon an indictment copied into the record is a sufficient record of the finding of the grand jury.⁵⁹

The foreman's name endorsed upon the indictment need not be copied into the minutes.⁶⁰

Position in Record.—The relative position which the entry occupies in the record will not affect the validity of the indictment.⁶¹

Presentment.—An entry as to the finding has been held to be unnecessary in case of a presentment.⁶²

c. Record of Return.—The record must show a due return of the indictment by a grand jury in open court in the manner prescribed by law.⁶³ No set phraseology is required; any apt words showing the [b] The indictment itself being a part of the record it is not necessary that the record, independently of the indictment, should show it has been returned a true bill. State v. McCarty, 17 Minn. 76; State v. O'Brien, 18 R. I. 105, 25 Atl. 910. See also Pickrel v. Com., 17 Ky. L. Rep. 120, 30 S. W. 617. But see State v. Brown, 81 N. C. 568.

[a] By statute it is the duty of the clerk to transcribe upon the minutes of the court the indorsement "a true bill," and the foreman's signature, as well as the body of the indictment itself. But when the original bearing proper indorsements is on file in the case, the failure of the clerk to copy the indorsement and signature on the minutes will not vitiate the original. State v. Herron, 86 Tenn. 442, 7 S. W. 37.

(Va.)* 345, the record after having given the names of the grand jury, stated that they had been sworn and charged, and retired to consider of their presentments and indictments, "and after some time returned into court with a presentment for unlawful gaming against J. [a] Practice in Federal Court.—In the federal court it is the practice not to make a record of the return of the indictment at the time thereof but subsequently the clerk makes the proper entry on the minute book and docket, from the indorsement upon the bill. United States v. Levally, 36 Fed. 687.

[b] On appeal, (1) the record must affirmatively show a due return (State v. Dixon, 97 Ind. 125; Cox v. State, 7 Tex. App. 495), (2) and this is a part of the record in every criminal case brought to the appellate court (Miller v. State, 40 Ark. 488-492; Ford v. State, 34 Ark. 649); (3) and when such entry does not appear, it is the practice to award certiorari to supply the omission, and if it appear there was no record entry the practice has been to reverse the judgment of conviction. Miller v. State, 40 Ark. 488.

[c] Presumption as to Entries.—In the absence of a bill of exceptions showing that it was proved on trial of a motion to quash, by the minutes of the court, that the entries of a due return in open court were not made, on appeal it will be presumed that the entries of the due return were made. Alderson v. State, 2 Tex. App. 10.

[b] “Present” Indictment.—A record stating “Come, now the grand jury for the term aforesaid, and present in open court the following indictment,” is sufficient. The objection that the word “present” used above is not equivalent to “return” is untenable. Reeves v. State, 84 Ind. 116.

[c] “Report” on Indictment.—A record reciting that the grand jury “reported” an indictment was a sufficient compliance with the code requiring the indictment to be “presented” by the foreman. Patterson v. Com., 86 Ky. 313, 5 S. W. 387.

[d] “While an absolute defect will not be cured, or a positive fact supplied by presumption, yet, when the difficulty arises from the inartificial use of language, and it is evident the statute has been complied with, liberality will be indulged in support of the record.” Nichols v. State, 46 Miss. 284. See State v. Gilmore, 9 W. Va. 641.

[a] Entry in Minutes of Judge Insufficient.—The minutes of the judge being no part of the record, an entry upon the minutes showing a return of the indictment in open court is insufficient to cure an omission of such entry in the record. Sattler v. People, 59 Ill. 68.

[b] Presumption of Innocence. Where the record fails to show a return of the indictment by the grand jury, the presumption of innocence in favor of the accused will not permit the supposition that the indictment has been properly returned but not entered of record. Adamson v. State, 11 Ind. 304.

[a] Indorsement and Minutes of Clerk Sufficient.—The indorsement upon the indictment filed and an entry in the minutes of the clerk of the fact of a return by the grand jury are sufficient to show that the indictment has been duly returned by the grand jury. Hogan v. State, 30 Wis. 428, 11 Am. Rep. 575.

67. Ala.—Williams v. State, 150 Ala. 84, 43 So. 182; Mose v. State, 35 Ala. 421. See McKee v. State, 82 Ala. 32-38, 2 So. 451. Ky.—Pence v. Com., 95 Ky. 618, 26 S. W. 810. La.—State v. Mason, 32 La. Ann. 1018.

[a] In Florida (1) there is no statute requiring a formal entry in the record of the return, and apparently none is necessary but the better practice is to make a formal entry of the return in the minutes (Johnson v. State, 24 Fla. 162-170, 4 So. 535; Collins v. State, 13 Fla. 651); (2) there should be however some evidence of a return in open court and this should appear either from the record or from the indorsements upon the indictment. Goodson v. State, 29 Fla. 511, 10 So. 738.

[b] Georgia.—The failure of the clerk to make an entry in the minutes of the due return of the indictment is an irregularity which is cured by the testimony of the bailiff and clerk. Chelsey v. State, 121 Ga. 340, 49 S. E. 258.

[c] Iowa.—In State v. Glover, 3 Greene 249-254, it was held that the omission to make a record that the indictment was presented in the presence of the grand jury, is fatal to the proceedings and that the action of the lower court in refusing to permit amendment was correct. Subsequent to this decision it was enacted that no indictment should be quashed if it could be ascertained therefrom, that the same was presented in some court having jurisdiction, etc. (Code, §2916).

it will be presumed that the indictment had been legally returned.⁶³ In other jurisdictions it is provided that an indorsement upon the

Under this state of the law it was held in State v. Axt, 6 Iowa 511, that the requirements of §2914 were directory merely, and not essential to the validity of the indictment. And see State v. Jolly, 7 Iowa 15.

68. Regularity Presumed.—See People v. Lee, 2 Utah 441-450, holding that even though the due presentation of an indictment in open court is jurisdictional, in the absence of a showing to the contrary it will be presumed to have been so presented. The court being of general criminal jurisdiction all intendments are in favor of the regularity of the proceedings. See also People v. Blackwell, 27 Cal. 65; State v. McIntire, 59 Iowa 267, 13 N. W. 287. But see Bowen v. State, 81 Ga. 482, 8 S. E. 736.

[a] The statute prohibiting any record entry of the return of the indictment when the defendant is still at large, it was held in State v. Lord, 118 Mo. 1, 23 S. W. 764, that from the fact of an indictment endorsed by the prosecuting attorney, the foreman of the grand jury and the clerk, being filed there is a prima facie presumption of a due return. See State v. Bobbst, 131 Mo. 328, 32 S. W. 1149.

[b] From an indorsement of "true bill" upon an indictment, signed by the foreman, and a recital in the indictment "the jurors on their oath, present," etc., the indictment will be presumed to have been properly presented. Proof to the contrary can be heard only on plea in abatement filed in apt time. State v. Weaver, 104 N. C. 758, 10 S. E. 486.

[c] State v. Peloquin, 106 Me. 358, 76 Atl. 888, holds that "independent of any record as to the precise date of such return, the presence of the indictment in court, for the arraignment and trial of the accused is sufficient evidence that it has been so returned at some time after the beginning of the term and prior to such arraignment," it being presumed the proceedings of the court have been regular.

[d] Records Destroyed.—Under statute requiring the clerk to record the indictment in a book, etc., it was held that where the records had been destroyed by fire, "there is a legal presumption arising from the fact that he recorded the indictment in question, that it had been found by a grand jury and returned into court." The indictment in this case was signed by prosecuting attorney, indorsed a true bill and indorsed filed in open court. Miller v. State, 40 Ark. 488.

[e] Statement That Process Would Issue.—It was held in State v. Mason, 32 La. Ann. 1018, that an entry upon the minutes of fact of an indictment indorsed "true bill," signed by the foreman and, that the court ordered the finding should be recorded and that process should issue, is sufficient to raise a presumption that the indictment was duly returned into open court, since the clerk enters on the minutes only transactions done in the court while in session. State v. Onnmacht, 10 La. Ann. 198.

[f] Indorsement "Filed."—In State v. Crilly, 69 Kan. 802, 77 Pac. 701, there was no record entry of the return but a copy of the indictment, showing an indorsement "true bill" by the foreman and an indorsement by the clerk "Presented in presence of the grand jury and filed," etc., was set out in full in the record. It was held that the indictment would be presumed to have been duly returned. But see McKenzie v. State, 24 Ark. 636.

[g] Where the record fails to show the presence of a justice of the supreme court at the court house at the return of the indictment, it is presumed all acts were regularly done, and in such case the absence of the supreme justice being a necessary condition, it will be presumed that none were present. State v. Turner, 72 N. J. L. 404, 60 Atl. 1112.

[h] Presumption as to Number of Jurors at Return.—Where the record asserts that the grand jury returned the indictment and there is nothing contradictory to the conclusion that twelve were present, it will not be presumed that less were present. Letcher v. State, 159 Ala. 59, 48 So. 805; Russell v. State, 33 Ala. 366-370.

[i] Common Law Contrasted.—From the finding and filing of the indictment it will be presumed to have been duly indictment of its filing, dated, and signed by the clerk, is a sufficient showing of the return.⁶⁹

Postponement of Entry.—Where the accused is not in custody or has not been released on bail, it is frequently provided by statute,⁷⁰ or, in the absence of such a statute, it is sometimes the custom of the court⁷¹ to postpone the entry of the return to a term subsequent to the appearance of the defendant, until which time the only record is the endorsement on the indictment.⁷²

Partial Omission of Names.—If in recording the fact of the return of an indictment against several defendants the clerk omits some of them, the indictment is good as to those whose names are entered of record.⁷³

d. Record of Filing.—The record should show the indictment has presented. Such was not the case at common law for at common law this must be shown affirmatively from the record. State v. Beebe, 17 Minn. 241.

[b] An entry upon the minutes of the fact of its return is not required. Cook v. State, 57 Miss. 654.

[c] In New Jersey the indictment is complete without an indorsement by the clerk of the return, and it becomes effective when handed to the court. State v. Unsworth, 85 N. J. L. 237, 88 Atl. 1097.

Corson*, 12 Mo. 404.

[a] Substance of Entry Under Such Statute.—Such a "statute intends the indorsements upon the indictment and the date of its filing, as furnishing sufficient evidence to justify such an entry upon the minutes of the court at a subsequent term," and an entry not purporting to be such but to come from the breast of the clerk is insufficient. The minutes of the subsequent term should contain a "statement of the style of the case, and then an entry that the grand jury at the April term had returned into court, and through their foreman presented the bill of indictment, which, with its endorsements, is as follows, and that this entry was not made at the April term, because the defendant was not then in custody, or under bail or recognizance." Cachute v. State, 50 Miss. 165-171. See State v. Pitts, 58 Mo. 556.

[b] Entry During Trial.—Under such a statute, it is within the power of the court to cause an entry of the return of the indictment to be made during trial. Cook v. State, 57 Miss. 654.

[c] In Texas the fact of presentment is entered upon the minutes, noting the style and file number, but omitting the name of the accused unless he is in custody or on bail. Lynn v. State, 28 Tex. App. 515, 13 S. W. 867.

been filed in court,⁷⁴ by some appropriate endorsement or other entry.

e. As to Court.—The record of the court in which the indictment or presentment is made should show that the court was organized and sitting in the manner prescribed by law.⁷⁵ It has been held that the record should state the place at which the court convened,⁷⁶ and that it was in session at the time the indictment was returned.⁷⁷

f. As to Offense.—The record entry should in general terms state⁷⁸

[d] An indictment becomes a part of the record when filed, without any action on the part of the court. Stewart v. State, 24 Ind. 142.

What constitutes filing in general see 8 STANDARD PROC. 980.

75. Mulligan v. State, 47 Miss. 304.

[a] Names of Judges.—(1) The record should show the name of the presiding judge (Holton v. State, 2 Fla. 476-505; Mulligan v. State, 47 Miss. 304. But see Yates v. People, 38 Ill. 527), (2) and the names of as many judges as are required to constitute the court. If more are present it is sufficient to say, "and others their fellows, etc." Cruiser v. State, 18 N. J. L. 206.

[b] Court Identified by Name of Judge.—In a county having two district courts, each entitled to a grand jury, an objection to the indictment on the ground it was not shown to have been returned into the proper court is not well taken where it is shown that the presiding judge of the court in which the indictment was returned was the judge of the proper court. Outley v. State (Tex.), 99 S. W. 95.

77. State v. Cunningham, 130 Mo. 507, 32 S. W. 970 (holding that a recitation in the record of the return of an indictment "into open court" shows that the court was then in session); Cruiser v. State, 18 N. J. L. 206.

[a] Date of Commencement of Session.—If the bill is found at an adjourned term, the record should show the date of the commencement of the original session. Holton v. State, 2 Fla. 476-505; King v. Fisher, 2 Str. (Eng.) 865.

78. Goodwyn v. State, 4 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 520-535; State v. Geyer, 44 W. Va. 649, 29 S. E. 1020.

[a] Offense Described as "a Felony".—The entry need not describe the offense in any but general terms as "a felony" or "a misdemeanor." If the offense is a common-law offense a description of the character of the offense is generally added, but this ought not to be done if the offense is a statutory offense. If the description is not irreconcilably in conflict with the offense described in the indictment it will not be fatal, but it is otherwise if there is an irreconcilable conflict. State v. Heaton, 23 W. Va. 773; State v. Fitzpatrick, 8 W. Va. 707. But see Holton v. State, 2 Fla. 476, 505, holding a record which states the return of an indictment charging a felony cannot be held a record of an indictment charging murder. Copying an indictment for murder in the record will not cure the defect.

[b] If the character of the offense is indicated, the absence of the words "a felony" or "a misdemeanor" does not vitiate. Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510.

the character of the offense charged, although in some jurisdictions this is not considered necessary.⁷⁹

g. As to Witnesses Before Grand Jury.—It is not necessary that the record should state that the witnesses before the grand jury were sworn;⁸⁰ or that the names of the witnesses⁸¹ or the evidence upon which the indictment is found⁸² be set out in the record.

h. Identifying Indictment in Record.—The record should identify the indictment by which defendant is charged, as the one returned by the grand jury;⁸³ but all that is necessary is that there should be such an identity between the record of the finding and the particular bill of indictment to which it is made to apply as to leave no room for mistake or doubt.⁸⁴

[c] It is not necessary that the word "unlawfully" be used in the record entry of the finding, although the indictment charges defendant with "unlawfully" selling intoxicating liquors to a minor. State v. Gilmore, 9 W. Va. 641.

[d] Indorsement.—It was held in State v. De Hart, 109 La. 570-578, 33 So. 605, that an indorsement of the name of the offense charged upon the back of the indictment is no part of the finding by the grand jury and an entry of such indorsement, which charges a crime not known to laws of the state although the crime charged in the body was an offense, in the minutes does not change the formal accusation, nor affect the validity of the proceedings had thereunder.

[a] The indorsement "filed" by the clerk sufficiently identifies the bill with the minute entry. State v. Harp, 133 La. 1007, 63 So. 500.

[b] The record in Engeman v. State, 54 N. J. L. 247, 23 Atl. 676, states "that by the grand inquest it (the indictment) is presented in manner and form following, to-wit, the bills herewith presented are true bills," then follows the indictment. Held that the record sufficiently identifies the indictment as one returned by the grand jury, the interpolation "to-wit the bills herewith presented are true bills," does not destroy the force of the entry.

[c] The entry in the record of the finding of an indictment against B. S. Compton is sufficient prima facie to identify the indictment against Benjamin S. Compton. State v. Compton, 13 W. Va. 852.

[d] Identification by Number.—When the accused is not in custody or on bail, the indictment is sufficiently identified in the record by its number and date of filing. Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 Ark. 238. But see Shropshire v. State, 12 Ark. 190, 209; Willie v. State, 46 Ind. 363.

The statute requiring recording is merely to obviate the difficulty consequent upon the loss of the original and the failure to record does not affect the validity of the indictment. Porter v. State, 17 Ind. 415; Reed v. State, 8 Ind. 200.

[b] Copy in Transcript on Change of Venue.—Upon a change of venue, the statute requiring the clerk to make up the transcript with the original papers to be delivered to the clerk of the county to which the change has been granted, it is not necessary to copy the indictment into the transcript. Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 144.

[b] Recording in Court Where Found.—It is necessary that the indictment should be recorded in the court where found only, and it is not necessary to record it in the court to which the venue was changed. If necessary it will be presumed to have been recorded in the former court. Reed v. State, 8 Ind. 200.

[c] Clerk May Record Out of Term. If an indictment is returned into court upon the last day of the term, the clerk may record it at a later day. The statute providing for the recordation and providing that before the last day of the term the clerk shall compare the indictment with the record is directory so far as the time for filing is concerned. Courtney v. State, 5 Ind. App. 356, 367, 32 N. E. 335.

its clerk to indorse the indictment "filed,"⁹¹ or returned,⁹² or to correct the indorsement on the indictment, or to supply omissions therein,⁹³ as of the date of such filing and return; and it may also cause its clerk to make a nunc pro tunc entry upon the minutes of the court or upon the record of the fact of the return⁹⁴ and filing of the indictment,⁹⁵ or of the organization of the grand jury,⁹⁶ or other matters necessary to make the records speak the truth.⁹⁷ The making

[a] Amendment may be made to correct the entry even at a subsequent term. See People v. Lee, 2 Utah 441-450. But see Bowen v. State, 81 Ga. 482, 8 S. E. 736, holding that an entry at a subsequent term of the return, without an order to make the entry nunc pro tunc, will not cure the omission to enter the return at the proper time.

[b] In Cornwell v. State, 53 Miss. 385, it was held that under a statute forbidding an entry of the return of the indictment unless defendant be in custody or on bail, it is permissible to make an original entry upon the record at a subsequent term, or if there is already an imperfect entry, it may be ignored as invalid and a new entry made. But if the defendant is in custody and an insufficient record had been made, an amendment at a subsequent term is improper.

B. OF INFORMATION.—1. Basis and Prerequisites.—a. Leave of Court.—At common law informations for offenses affecting the king, or the state were filed ex officio by the attorney general without the necessity of leave of court;⁹⁹ and for offenses against private individuals were filed as a matter of course until an early English statute provided that leave of court be first had and obtained.¹ And in the United States in some jurisdictions leave of court must first be obtained,² while in others leave to file is not necessary.³

[a] An error in the date in the file mark (1) may be corrected by amendment (Nelson v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. 349, 101 S. W. 1012; Boren v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. 637-644, 25 S. Discretion of Court.—Leave to file the information rests in the sound discretion of the court and is not granted as of course.⁴

Application for leave of court need not conform to technical rules of pleading,⁵ and it need not be verified.⁶

The order granting leave need not be in writing other than an entry in the minutes of the court by the clerk,⁷ and the omission by the clerk to enter the order does not invalidate the information or the proceedings thereunder.⁸

Revocation of Leave.—The court also has a right in the exercise of its discretion to revoke its leave already granted.⁹

Order To File.—In some states if the district attorney decides no information should be filed, he will make a statement to that effect to the court, giving his reasons therefor. If the court is dissatisfied therewith it may order an information to be filed.¹⁰

b. *Preliminary Examination.*¹¹—In the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions requiring it, no preliminary examination is necessary as a prerequisite to the filing of an information.¹² But by [d] In New York the statute requires that when the defendant is in custody the district attorney shall file the information not later than the day following the magistrate's return, and in all other cases within ten days thereafter. It was held in People v. Spier, 120 App. Div. 786, 105 N. Y. Supp. 741, that this was not a short statute of limitations and is for the direction of the district attorney but it does not prevent the filing of an information after that time.

[e] In North Dakota, statute requires the information to be filed "at the next regular term of the district court." It was held in State v. Foster, 14 N. D. 561, 105 N. W. 938, that "regular term" did not refer to each statutory term but it means a term in which the court is equipped with a jury.

[f] Where the information and the order committing the defendant were filed on the same day, it is presumed they were regularly filed, and thus the information was filed subsequent to the commitment. People v. McCurdy, 68 Cal. 576, 10 Pac. 207.

Filing in Vacation.—In the absence of a statute to the contrary an information may be filed in vacation,⁴⁹ but in some jurisdictions this is not permitted,⁵⁰ though it has been held sufficient to file it in term time while the court was not actually in session.⁵¹

[a] Where the statute (Mo. Rev. St., §3126) provided that "in vacation" meant an adjournment of court for more than one day, it was held in State v. Derkum, 27 Mo. App. 628, that an information which was filed in the interim during an adjournment of the court for more than one day was nevertheless filed in term time and that the definition of "in vacation" in §3126, Rev. St., was not applicable to §§1762 and 1769 and that "vacation" in these sections referred to the vacation between a term and the next term thereafter.

[b] In counties where the offices of probate judge and county judge are vested in one person, the filing of an information with the clerk or judge in the probate term is a filing during vacation. Burns v. People, 45 Ill. App. 70.

[c] §2, ch. 178 of Kan. Laws, 1887, providing that no examination is necessary in misdemeanor cases not cognizable before the justices of the peace does not prevent the filing of an information in cases of this nature in vacation. In re Eddy, 40 Kan. 592, 20 Pac. 283.

V. PRELIMINARY COMPLAINT, AFFIDAVIT OR INFORMATION.—A. NECESSITY FOR.—No complaint or information is necessary as a prerequisite to the presentation of an indictment.⁶⁶ At common law⁶⁷ an affidavit or complaint is not necessary as a basis for informations of the first class,⁶⁸ but is a necessary prerequisite to the filing of informations of the second class.⁶⁹

By virtue of constitutional provision, common to many states, and statutes pursuant thereto providing that no warrant shall issue to seize any person without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation reduced to writing, it is necessary that an information be based upon oath, which is generally required to be in the form of an affidavit or sworn complaint.⁷⁰ Although it has been held that this requirement is prima facie complied with when an information is filed by the prosecuting attorney,⁷¹ it is generally required that a warrant of ar-

[a] In Missouri, it is necessary that the information be supported by the oath of a person in one of three ways, viz., by verification of the prosecuting attorney, or a verification of a person competent to testify, or the information must be based upon the affidavit of some person competent to testify, filed therewith. State v. Decker, 185 Mo. 182, 83 S. W. 1082; State v. Hannigan, 182 Mo. 15, 81 S. W. 406; State v. Sheridan, 182 Mo. 13, 81 S. W. 410; State v. Brown, 181 Mo. 192-224, 79 S. W. 1111; State v. Schnettler, 181 Mo. 173-184, 79 S. W. 1123; State v. Bonner, 178 Mo. 424, 77 S. W. 463; State v. Bennett, 102 Mo. 356-371, 14 S. W. 865, 10 L. R. A. 717. But see State v. Pohl, 170 Mo. 422, 70 S. W. 695, and State v. Sweeney, 56 Mo. App. 409, decided before the statute.

[b] It was stated in United States v. Baumert, 179 Fed. 735, that the United States attorney can file an information based upon the sworn facts testified to upon the preliminary examination even though taken before the commissioner of another district, or it may be based upon affidavits taken before proper officials.

[a] It was held in Hammond v. State, 3 Wash. 171, 28 Pac. 334, if the information itself recites sufficient facts to bring the case within subd. 4 of §1 of act of January 29, 1890, no affidavit is required as a basis for the information.

[b] In Missouri, (1) if the information is not based upon the knowledge, information or belief of the prosecuting attorney, it must be based upon a complaint verified by the oath of a person having knowledge of the offense, deposited with the justice of the peace or filed with the information. State v. Lewis, 70 Mo. App. 40; State v. Harris, 30 Mo. App. 82; State v. Shaw, 26 Mo. App. 383. [b] If an information containing inconsistent counts be based upon one affidavit which is made to cover the entire information, it is tantamount to a failure to base the information upon an affidavit. It does not cure the defect to abandon the inconsistent counts at the beginning of the trial, because the affidavit must be tested as to the matters to which it applied when made. State v. Weyland, 126 Mo. App. 723, 105 S. W. 660.

[c] An information verified upon the information and belief of the prosecuting attorney does not of itself constitute "probable cause supported by affidavit," within the meaning of the constitution. State v. Gleason, 32 Kan. 245, 4 Pac. 363; State v. Boulter, 5 Wyo. 236, 39 Pac. 883.

[d] In Texas, (1) the statute requiring an affidavit as a prerequisite to the filing of the information is applicable to informations filed in the county court. Turner v. State, 3 Tex. App. 551. (2) But an information cannot be based upon an affidavit charging a felony. Kinley v. State, 29 Tex.

The magistrate is without jurisdiction to issue a warrant or even a subpoena for the examination of witnesses unless there be filed a good and sufficient preliminary complaint.⁷³ The subsequent filing will not cure an absence of such affidavit or a defective affidavit,⁷⁴ but it has been held that the absence of an affidavit is a mere irregularity which may be waived by failure to make proper objection.⁷⁵

B. BY WHOM MADE.—In the absence of statutory provisions limiting it, a complaint may be made by any one competent to make oath to it.⁷⁶ Statutes frequently require the oath or affidavit to be made by a person competent to testify as a witness,⁷⁷ or by a credible

[a] Definition of "Credible Person."—A credible person within the meaning of the statute means "a competent as well as a credible witness." Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 70.

[b] An infamous person is incompetent to make an affidavit. Perez v. State, 10 Tex. App. 327.

[c] The husband of the accused (1) not being competent to testify against his wife except in the prosecution of offenses committed by one against the other, is not a competent person to make an affidavit upon which to base an information against his wife. Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 70. In a case in which the husband is charged with rape upon his step-daughter, the offense is an offense against the wife in the nature of adultery and as a consequence she is a competent witness against him and is competent to sign and file a complaint against him. *Harris v. Waiver of objections to defective verification, see infra, XV, A, 7, e.

[a] "A complaint in writing charging a criminal offense, although upon information and belief only as to the person suspected of having committed it, is sufficient to authorize an investigation before a magistrate by the examination of witnesses . . . But, before a warrant can lawfully issue for the arrest of the offender, the magistrate must have some evidence of his guilt. Facts and circumstances stated on information and belief only, without giving any sufficient grounds on which to base the belief, are insufficient to confer jurisdiction as to the person." Blodgett v. Race, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 132. See People ex rel. Livingston v. Wyatt, 113 App. Div. 111, 99 N. Y. Supp. 114. Compare People ex rel. Levy v. Preston, 44 Misc. 267, 18 N. Y. Crim. 475, 89 N. Y. Supp. 889, holding such a document does not confer jurisdiction on the magistrate to hold an examination.

[b] "A verification of a criminal affiant have actual knowledge of the facts, but the complaint may be made upon information and belief.⁸⁶ It has been held that an affidavit complaint on information and belief is sufficient for every purpose, except merely the issuing of a warrant for the arrest of the defendant." Cameron v. Territory, 16 Okla. 634, 86 Pac. 68; In re Cummings, 11 Okla. 286, 66 Pac. 332. Compare United States v. Collins, 79 Fed. 65.

[c] Although it is provided by statute that an information may be filed by a county attorney upon information and belief, (1) it was held in State v. Gleason, 32 Kan. 245, 4 Pac. 363, that the constitution and bill of rights require a complaint setting forth the allegations as true. (2) Consequently a complaint filed under the statute is insufficient. State v. Babbitt, 32 Kan. 253, 4 Pac. 367.

[d] Although the original complaint was upon information and belief, the warrant having recited that upon examination on oath of the present defendants before him, it appeared to the justice that the offense had been committed, etc., it must be presumed there was a proper legal showing. Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63, 37 N. W. 45, 13 Am. St. Rep. 376.

[e] The perfect allegations in the information will not cure the defect existing because the affidavit is based on information and belief. State v. Davidson, 46 Mo. App. 9.

[f] A complaint stating the complainant "has probable cause to suspect, and does suspect," etc., is insufficient. Blodgett v. Race, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 132.

[g] The complaint should state that the affiant had "just and reasonable grounds to suspect" the defendant committed the offense with which he is charged. Housh v. People, 75 Ill. 487.

[h] Neither a police officer nor any other person can cause the arrest of one on a complaint on information and belief. In re Blum, 9 Misc. 571, 30 N. Y. Supp. 396.

[a] An affidavit stating the facts, "as affiant verily believed," is not objectionable. The use of the past tense is evidently a mistake of the draftsman. It also shows affiant spoke of upon information and belief must state the source of deponent's information.⁸⁷

If the complaint is composed of several counts the counts defective because of the fact they are stated upon information and belief will not impair the sufficiency of the counts positively stated. An information cannot be attacked upon the ground that the affiant did not his then present belief. State v. Buxton, 31 Ind. 67.

[b] In Ex parte Blake, 155 Cal. 586, 102 Pac. 269, upon authority of Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 Pac. 619, it was held that the original information upon information and belief will be sufficient if followed by the depositions of the complainant or other witnesses stating facts tending to show defendant's guilt. A mere affidavit containing no evidence and followed by no depositions stating such facts would be insufficient.

[c] Complaint on Suspicion.—The statute authorizing justices on the preliminary hearing to commit all persons suspected to be guilty of a capital offense seems to authorize a complaint upon suspicion. Com. v. Phillips, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 211.

[d] But in Alabama, (1) a complaint stating the affiant has "cause to believe and does believe," etc., is insufficient. It must state he had probable cause to believe, or its equivalent. Ross v. State, 139 Ala. 111, 36 So. 718; Sims v. State, 137 Ala. 79, 34 So. 400; Monroe v. State, 137 Ala. 88, 34 So. 382; Streater v. State, 137 Ala. 93, 34 So. 395; Johnson v. State, 82 Ala. 29, 2 So. 446. (2) An affidavit that affiant "has cause to believe and does believe that in his opinion," etc., is insufficient. Chappell v. State, 156 Ala. 188, 47 So. 329. (3) Likewise the use of the words "good reason to believe," instead of "probable cause of believing," is not sufficient. Bessemer v. Edge, 162 Ala. 201, 50 So. 270.

[e] In Texas.—(1) A complaint stating that the complainant had "good reason to believe," etc., is insufficient. The code requires it go farther and state that the complainant "did believe" the said offense to have been committed. Wright v. State, 63 Tex. Crim. 429, 140 S. W. 1105; Tompkins v. State (Tex. Crim.), 77 S. W. 436; Justice v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. 462, 76 S. W. 437; Smith v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. 411, 76 S. W. 436 (in which court said Brown v. State, 11 Tex. App. 451, carried the doctrine as far as the statute permitted); Hall v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. 591, 25 S. W. 292. (2) The omission of the word "good" before the phrase "reason to believe" will not invalidate the complaint. Dodson v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 571, 34 S. W. 754.

[f] In extradition proceedings, it is not necessary that the complainant have personal knowledge of the facts. "He may with entire propriety make the complaint on information and belief, stating the sources of his information and the grounds of his belief, and annexing to the complaint a properly certified copy of any indictment or equivalent proceeding, which may have been found in the foreign country or a copy of the depositions of witnesses having actual knowledge of the facts, taken under the treaty and act of congress." Rice v. Ames, 180 U. S. 371, 21 Sup. Ct. 406, 45 L. ed. 577.

[a] A complaint on information received, (1) does not comply with the constitution unless it states the belief of the complainant in the information received or the character and source of the information. Com. v. Lawyer, 15 Pa. Dist. 474; Com. v. Roland, 10 Pa. Dist. 410. (2) Where the complaint states affiant does believe, etc., the name of the person who gave him this information need not be given. Com. v. Story, 15 Pa. Dist. 513. Compare Com. v. Jossel, 1 Leh. have personal knowledge of the offense charged, the affidavit itself being in compliance with the statute,⁸⁹ but it may perhaps be shown that the affiant was not a competent witness,⁹⁰ or that his signature is a forgery.⁹¹

C. BEFORE WHOM MADE.—The affidavit or complaint must be sworn to before a proper officer⁹² who is ordinarily any person authorized to take and subscribe oaths and affirmations in criminal proceedings.⁹³

A notary public is qualified to administer the oath,⁹⁴ although at common law the notary was regarded as an officer of civil and commercial law and without power to administer oaths in criminal cases.⁹⁵ It has been variously provided or held that a justice of the peace,⁹⁶

a county judge,⁹⁷ and a county clerk⁹⁸ are proper officers for this purpose.

Where the prosecuting attorney is by statute made a proper officer to take criminal complaints,⁹⁹ it has been held that a deputy prosecuting attorney,¹ a de facto deputy prosecuting attorney,² and a prosecuting attorney pro tem³ may also take criminal complaints, but in the absence of statutory authority a city attorney is without authority.⁴

2. Title of Court and Cause.—It is not necessary that the complaint or affidavit contain the name of the court and the title of the action,¹⁰ especially where the affidavit is taken before a notary public, in which case a title would be improper for the reason that usually there is no action pending at the taking of the affidavit.¹¹

[a] The affidavit provided for in §299 of the code as the basis of a warrant may be the basis of the accusation, but perhaps any other, although made after arrest if sufficiently specific, would suffice as a basis for the accusation. Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583.

[b] A complaint is in the nature of a deposition only, setting forth the facts stated by the informant, sufficiently showing the commission of the offense and its perpetration by the defendant, to justify the issuance of a warrant of arrest. People v. Sacramento Butchers' P. Assn., 12 Cal. App. 471, 107 Pac. 712. See People v. Lapique, 10 Cal. App. 669, 103 Pac. 164.

[c] Affidavit To Speak in First Person.—The statute (L. O. L., §829) of Oregon requires that the affidavit shall be made to speak in the first person. Smith v. McDuffee (Ore.), 142 Pac. 558.

[d] Forms of Affidavit.—Cal.—Kerr's Pocket Penal Code (1909), Form No. 2, Complaint, §1426. Ga.—Code, pt. 2, §905. Mass.—Rev. Laws, ch. 218, §67. N. Y.—Code Crim. Proc., Forms, No. 1, et seq.

[e] In many states, the statute prescribes no form in which the complaint is to be made. Mich.—Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363. N. Y.—People v. Hicks, 15 Barb. 153. Okla.—Ex parte Flowers, 2 Okla. Crim. 430, 101 Pac. 860. Vt.—State v. Freeman, 59 Vt. 661, 10 Atl. 752. Wash.—State v. Newton, 29 Wash. 373, 70 Pac. 31.

[f] In Iowa the code provides that the preliminary information "may be in the form required in criminal actions triable before a justice of the peace." Iowa Code, 1897, §5182.

For formal requisites of such an information, see infra, VIII, C.

9. Cal.—Penal Code, §806. Kan.—State v. King, 71 Kan. 287, 80 Pac. 606; State v. Goetz, 65 Kan. 125, 69 Pac. 187. Minn.—State v. Richardson, 34 Minn. 115, 24 N. W. 354. Mo.—Rev.

St., 1909, §5020; State v. Flannery, 173 S. W. 1053. N. Y.—People ex rel. Livingston v. Wyatt, 113 App. Div. 111, 99 N. Y. Supp. 114. Phil. Isl. Act No. 1773; United States v. Ortiz, 19 Phil. Isl. 174; United States v. Narvas, 14 Phil. Isl. 410. Tex.—Texas Penal Code, art. 257; Johnson v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. 580, 85 S. W. 274; Morris v. State, 2 Tex. App. 502. Utah.—Comp. Laws, 1907, §4604; State v. Anderson, 35 Utah 496, 101 Pac. 385. Vt.—See State Treasurer v. Rice, 11 Vt. 339.

Writing Unnecessary.—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430, 65 N. W. 280; People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625, 53 N. W. 826; People v. Bechtel, 80 Mich. 623, 45 N. W. 582; People v. Clement, 72 Mich. 116, 40 N. W. 190. See Turner v. People, 33 Mich. 363; State v. Killet, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 289.

[b] The word complaint as used in the statutes in reference to criminal offenses sometimes means the formal written charge of crime to which the accused is to answer, and sometimes it means the oral charge which may be made to a proper magistrate to be by him reduced to writing. Pub. St., ch. 212, §15 (Rev. Laws, ch. 217, §22) of Massachusetts refers to the latter. Hobbs v. Hill, 157 Mass. 556, 32 N. E. 862.

[c] Although the filing of a written information in the form of a deposition (1) does not seem to be expressly required by the code (People v. Hicks, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 153; People v. Zabor, 44 Misc. 633, 90 N. Y. Supp. 412), (2) it is necessarily required by implication from the provisions relating to arraignment and examination of the prisoner. People ex rel. Farley v. Crane, 94 App. Div. 397, 88 N. Y. Supp. 343.

10. See Hall v. State, 178 Ind. 448, 99 N. E. 732; Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630, 36 N. E. 419.

11. Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630, 36 N. E. 419.

3. Formal Beginning and Conclusion.—It is not necessary that the complaint should use the formal beginning set forth in the statute, especially if the words omitted are used at the beginning of the information.¹² Sometimes it is required that the complaint conclude with the words "against the peace and dignity of the state."¹³

G. STATEMENT OF OFFENSE.—The preliminary complaint¹⁴ must

[b] In misdemeanors, no technical terms are essential. Wilson v. State, 80 Miss. 388, 31 So. 787.

[a] Where no written complaint is required, the fact that one unnecessarily made is insufficient to authorize a warrant will not invalidate the proceedings for the reason it will be presumed that there was a valid oral complaint made. People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430, 65 N. W. 280.

[b] The complaint should state, as particularly as possible, the nature of the offense and the circumstances attending its commission. People v. Guilarte, 11 Porto Rico 334; People v. Ruiz, 10 Porto Rico 529.

[c] Premeditation.—A complaint charging an act to have been done wilfully and feloniously necessarily charges premeditation by implication. People v. Del Moral, 16 Porto Rico 621.

[d] In New York, facts enough must be stated to show that the complainant is acting in good faith, and that he has reasonable grounds to believe that a crime has been committed by the person designated therein. People ex rel. Livingston v. Wyatt, 186 N. Y. 383, 79 N. E. 330, 9 Ann. Cas. 972, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159; People ex rel. Willett v. Quinn, 150 App. Div. 813, 135 N. Y. Supp. 477.

[e] Where the affidavit and information are filed together it is suffi-ever, is sufficient.²¹ And in some jurisdictions it is not necessary to state the facts constituting the offense, merely naming the offense is sufficient.²²

A charge in the language of the statute defining the offense is generally sufficient to meet the requirements of good criminal pleading.²³ If, however, the statute does not prescribe with definiteness the elements of the offense, an affidavit following the language of the statute would be insufficient.²⁴ It is not necessary²⁵ that the offense be charged in cient if the affidavit refers to the information containing all the necessary allegations. Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204.

[a] The means or agency (1) used in the commission of the offense need not be alleged. Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204. (2) "We know of no rule that requires a specific statement as to the character of the weapon used, especially where the affiant did not know what kind of an instrument it was." *Shelton v. [a] Where the terms of the statute are qualified by implication the simple following of a statute is insufficient. The charge must be laid according to the true construction of the act. the exact language of the statute; it is sufficient if words of equivalent import be used.

The formality and definiteness requisite in an information or indictment is not essential,²⁶ but, in some jurisdictions, the same certainty requisite in an indictment or information is necessary in the affidavit.²⁷ The general rule of criminal pleading that the offense must be charged with sufficient certainty to apprise the defendant of the nature of the charge against him applies to preliminary complaints.²⁸

Defective Spelling and Rhetoric.—Neither incorrect spelling,²⁹ improper punctuation,³⁰ or bad grammar will vitiate the preliminary affidavit or complaint,³¹ unless by reason thereof it is rendered uncertain or fails to charge an offense.³²

Second Complaint.—No more is required in a second complaint for a new warrant of arrest than is required in the original.³³

1. Averment of Time.—The time the offense was committed should be alleged.³⁴ It is only necessary to allege the date as distinctly as it is within the power of the affiant;³⁵ the precise date need not be alleged.³⁶ It is not necessary to allege that the offense occurred prior

31. The use of the pronoun "her" for the pronoun "them" does not affect the validity of the affidavit. Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583.

[a] The complaint charged that defendant "did on or about ——— day of ———, ———, and before the making of this complaint, then and there did," etc. It was held the use of the word "did" twice did not render the complaint meaningless or uncertain. Johnson v. State, 71 Tex. Crim. 610, 174 S. W. 1047.

32. An affidavit charging that the defendant, "did then and there, unlawfully, feloniously and forcibly make a violent assault upon her, the said Addie Young, then and there, unlawfully and feloniously did ravish and carnally know," was held insufficient for the reason the last clause was not connected with the preceding by a conjunction and is consequently fatally uncertain and incomplete. Strader v. State, 92 Ind. 376.

[a] Use of Word "Did."—But the omission of the auxiliary "did" be-

[a] A complaint which alleges the offense to have been committed at such a time that it would be barred is insufficient to sustain a judgment of conviction, unless the statute contains an exception preventing its operation. In such case, judgment will not be arrested for the reason that the proof may have shown defendant to be within the exception. If it alleges the offense to have been committed at a time barred and also at a later time not barred by the statute, the complaint is sufficient. State v. Hobbs, 39 Me. 212; *Smith v. b. Place of Making Complaint. — It is not required that the place where the complaint was made be alleged.⁴³

c. Averment of Jurisdictional Facts. — Where a prosecution by affidavit and information is permitted in certain specified cases only, facts bringing the case within such provision should be alleged in the absence of a statute to the contrary.⁴⁴

d. Name and Description of Person and Property Injured. — The name of the person against whom the offense is committed, if known,⁴⁵ or if the offense be against property, a description of such property⁴⁶ should be alleged.⁴⁷

[a] The jurat is sufficient to show that complainant was sworn without the allegation to this effect at the commencement of the complaint. Lay v. State, 180 Ind. 1, 102 N. E. 274.

[b] Amendment.—(1) The affixing of a jurat to a complaint after trial does not validate it. Scott v. State, 9 Tex. App. 434. (2) This complaint would have been sufficient if, prior to the trial, the court, after notice to defendant, authorized an amendment of the complaint. But an amendment without permission of court and notice to the defendant will not cure the omission. Montgomery v. State, 60 Tex. Crim. 303, 131 S. W. 1087; Skaggs v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. 79, 119 S. W. 106.

If taken before a state judge or a justice of the peace there must be a like certificate and so of commissioners outside the district where the affidavit is to be used. United States v. Baumert, 179 Fed. 735.

[d] Form of Jurat.—(1) A jurat stating "Subscribed and sworn to this 3rd day of September, 1872. A. S. Burr, J. P." is sufficient. Hosea v. State, 47 Ind. 180. (2) Likewise the jurat, "Received and sworn to," etc. Com. v. Sullivan, 14 Gray (Mass.) 97; State v. Freeman, 59 Vt. 661, 10 Atl. 752 (taken and sworn before me).

plaint Insufficient.—Since it is necessary that information be predicated on a complaint made prior to the information, where both the complaint and information were filed on the same day, a complaint failing to show it to have been sworn to prior to making of the information is insufficient. Bradberry v. State (Tex. Crim.), 152 S. W. 169. But see Ross v. State, 9 Ind. App. 35, 36 N. E. 167, omission not fatal.

[b] Abbreviations (1) of the month and of the state are objectionable. State v. Quintini, 76 Miss. 498, 25 So. 365. (2) But it is uniform practice to state the year in figures. Com. v. Keefe, 7 Gray (Mass.) 332.

83. Com. v. Taber, 155 Mass. 5, 28 N. E. 1056 (holding the description "justice of the peace authorized to issue warrants as aforesaid" by reference to the caption sufficiently designates the official character of the magistrate); Micau v. State (Tex. App.), 19 S. W. 762; Robertson v. State, 25 Tex. App. 529, 8 S. W. 659.

[a] "It was unnecessary for the word 'Clerk,' or the words 'Clerk of the circuit court,' or these with the words 'ex officio clerk of the county court' added, or other descriptive words to follow the name of the officer as subscribed to the jurat of the affidavit." Pruett v. State, 141 Ala. 69, 37 So. 343.

[b] The affidavit showed it was taken before "W. K. M. clerk." The record showed the information was filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court and that W. K. M. was such clerk. It was held this was sufficient to show the authority of W. K. M. to administer the oath, etc. State v. Downing, 22 Mo. App. 504.

[c] A motion to quash an affidavit, purporting to have been made before A. B. without designating his office, having been overruled, it must be presumed that the court below was fully advised that he was a person authorized to administer oaths. Brooster v. State, 15 Ind. 190.

[d] The letters "J. P." are a sufficient indication of the official character of the officer. Abrams v. State, 121 Ga. 170, 48 S. E. 965; Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630, 36 N. E. 419. Contra, Neiman v. State, 29 Tex. App. 360, 16 S. W. 253, but his official character would be sufficiently shown by the letters and figures "J. P. Prec. No. —, W. C."

[e] Precinct Number Omitted.—A jurat by a justice of the peace in which his precinct number was omitted was held sufficient in Gentry v. State, 62 Tex. Crim. 497, 137 S. W. 696, especially when the number was stated in the indorsement.

84. Smith v. State, 24 Ind. App. 417, 56 N. E. 924.

85. Morris v. State, 2 Tex. App. 502.

[a] But where the justice testifies that he swore the complaining witness to the complaint, his failure to sign the jurat does not invalidate it. People v. Lane, 124 Mich. 271, 82 N. W. 896, 7 Det. Leg. N. 206.

[b] Jurat Signed by Mechanical Means.—Though the practice of signing the jurat by means of a rubber stamp is not one to be commended, in the absence of any showing as to that fact, by way of affidavit or in the bill of exceptions, the appellate court will not take judicial knowledge of that fact. Rosenstein v. State, 9 Ind. App. 290, 36 N. E. 652.

86. Notary's Seal.—As a consequence of the statutory provision declaring the official acts of a notary void unless attested by his seal, an affidavit purporting to have been sworn to before a notary, which is not attested by his seal is insufficient. But if the court presume the notary had a seal, then it seems that if the seal is attached to the jurat before the ruling on the motion to quash, the affidavit,

O. FILING.—If no affidavit or complaint has been filed the court is without jurisdiction.⁸⁷ It should be filed in the manner and with the court or officer prescribed by law.⁸⁸ But if filed in the wrong court, it may be refiled in the proper place.⁸⁹ In some states it may be filed prior to, or with the information.⁹⁰ The requirement that the affidavit by virtue of the doctrine of relation will be valid. Miller v. State, 122 Ind. 355, 24 N. E. 156.

[a] Absence of Mayor's Seal.—In Qualter v. State, 120 Ind. 92, 22 N. E. 100, the record affirmatively showing that the affidavit had been sworn to, it was held that the omission of the mayor to attach his seal to the jurat was not of sufficient materiality to warrant a reversal.

[b] The seal of the court (1) need not be attached to the jurat of an affidavit sworn to before its clerk to be used only in that court. Mountjoy v. State, 78 Ind. 172. (2) The court ex officio takes notice of its officers and their signatures and the appellate court presumes the lower court noticed that J. S. H. was its clerk, and that the signature attesting the affidavit was his. Hipes v. State, 73 Ind. 39; Buell v. State, 72 Ind. 523. See Beller v. State, 90 Ind. 448; Mountjoy v. State, 78 Ind. 172. (3) Moreover, such a defect presented for the first time in arrest of judgment will not warrant a reversal. Rosenstein v. State, 9 Ind. App. 290, 36 N. E. 652.

87. Ross v. State (Tex. Crim.), 106 S. W. 340. See supra, V, A.

[a] Complaint Lost.—If the complaint has been filed but is afterwards lost the court still retains its jurisdiction. Ross v. State (Tex. Crim.), 106 S. W. 340. See infra, VII.

[b] But in Michigan, "the complaint is not required to be in writing or signed by the party, or filed with the justice. The justice may reduce it to writing if he sees fit, and ordinarily this is the best practice." People v. Clement, 72 Mich. 116, 40 N. W. 190.

88. It Need Not Be Filed in Open Court.—State v. Duggins, 146 Ind. 427, 45 N. E. 603.

[a] In Missouri, it is required by statute that the affidavit be filed with the justice or delivered to the prosecuting attorney. In the latter case it is filed with the information. State v. Sartin, 66 Mo. App. 626.

[b] Under a statute requiring the person making the affidavit to file it with the clerk of court or deposit it with the prosecuting attorney, it was held in State v. Daly, 49 Mo. App. 184, that the affidavit may be properly lodged with the assistant prosecuting attorney of the St. Louis court of criminal correction.

[c] A complaint which has been filed in the justice's court, may be later filed in the county court, and then an information may be filed thereon. Griffin v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. 374, 112 S. VI. RECONSIDERATION AND RESUBMISSION OF AND SUCCESSIVE INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.—A. RECONSIDERATION.—The powers of a grand jury over a bill of indictment, save only in so far as they may act upon a resubmission thereof for the purposes of amendment,⁹⁶ or otherwise,⁹⁷ are ended when it is returned into and received by the court.⁹⁸

They cannot, in case the bill is returned “a true bill,” reconsider the matter and vote to withdraw the indictment.⁹⁹ Nor can a bill returned “not a true bill” be reconsidered by that jury,¹ though a new bill may be submitted, however.² This rule, however, does not preclude a reconsideration of their finding before any report to the court and while the matter is still before them.³

[c] In Term Time or Vacation.—(1) In Indiana the statute authorizes the filing of the affidavit and information for an offense amounting to a misdemeanor, at any time whether in term time or in vacation. Hoover v. State, 110 Ind. 349, 11 N. E. 434. (2) §1989, Burns' Ann. St., 1914, providing that “all offenses . . . may be prosecuted . . . by affidavit filed in term time,” when considered in connection with the following section should be read, “by affidavit made in term time,” instead of “filed.” *Cole v. [a] Presumption.—Where a complaint was filed on the day of the trial by order of court, it will be presumed it was among the papers of the case and that it may have been attached to the information, for then the filing of the information would be sufficient filing of the complaint. Castleman v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 1, 43 S. W. 991, 44 S. W. 828.

B. RESUBMISSION.—Under statutes in some states, the dismissal of a charge by the grand jury does not prevent the same from being again submitted to a grand jury, as often as the court may direct.⁴ So too, under some statutes, there may be a resubmission of the indictment to the same or another grand jury upon the sustaining of motions to set aside or to quash, or of demurrers thereto;⁵ or if the court be of the opinion the facts constitute a higher degree of offense.⁶

Even in the absence of statute, neither the mere finding, nor refusing to find, an indictment by one grand jury will affect the power of the same or another grand jury to indict.⁷

[a] The district attorney may, before the defendant is required to plead, under §42, Rev. St., resubmit the case to the same or another grand jury where the indictment returned was defective. People v. Bissert, 71 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630.

[a] Though a statute provides that if during the trial the court is of the opinion that the facts proved constitute a higher grade of offense than that alleged, it may suspend the trial and resubmit the case to the grand jury, it is proper for the court before trial, if it is of such opinion, to resubmit the case to the grand jury. Nash v. State, 73 Ark. 399, 405, 84 S. W. 497; Ex parte Johnson, 71 Ark. 47, 70 S. W. 467.

[a] The court in United States v. Martin, 50 Fed. 918, said: "The doctrine in this state (meaning Virginia) and the other American states is that the ignoring of an indictment by one grand jury is no bar to a subsequent grand jury investigating the charge and finding an indictment for the same offense."

[b] It has been the practice on the presentation of a defective "true bill" for the prosecuting attorney to amend it and resubmit it to the grand jury, who again returns it a "true bill." The better practice is to submit a new bill, however. State v. Brown, 81 N. C. 568.

An order of court is essential to the resubmission of the cause,⁸ by express statutory provision in some states, where the charge has been dismissed by the grand jury,⁹ or where a demurrer has been inter-

8. "When a defendant has been once discharged on a return of 'ignoramus,' a new bill sent up without a fresh hearing, and without leave of court, should be promptly quashed in the absence of affirmative proof that the course taken was required to meet some grave emergency, or to provide for some urgent public need." Rowand v. Com., 82 Pa. 405.

[a] Order Not To Be Granted Pro Forma.—"While the court has power to permit the charges to be again submitted to the grand jury such power should be sparingly and discriminately used. It is a practice that ought not to be encouraged, nor granted pro forma. The court should act judicially, and permit such resubmission only when facts are presented which justify such action." People v. Neidhart, 35 Misc. 191, 71 N. Y. Supp. 591, 15 N. Y. Crim. 475.

[b] The application of the district attorney to resubmit the cause to the grand jury because he does not agree with the grand jury and is of the opinion they misunderstood the law and that they will, if the charge is again submitted, find an indictment, is not an appeal to the judicial discretion and cannot be granted. People v. Neidhart, 35 Misc. 191, 71 N. Y. Supp. 591, 15 N. Y. Crim. 475.

[c] In the absence of allegations of irregularity, oversight, mistake or fraud the court will not grant the motion of private counsel for the prosecution to send an indictment to a second grand jury after it has been ignored by the first. Com. v. Whitaker, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 42; Com. v. Priestly, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 543.

[a] An order for a resubmission is only necessary, under some such statutes, when the charge against the person has been dismissed by a grand jury; and there can be no dismissal of a charge unless the grand jury considers it and takes some action upon it. People v. Sebring, 14 Misc. 31, 37, 35 N. Y. Supp. 237.

[b] No order of court necessary where a new charge is presented to the grand jury. People v. Warren, 109 N. Y. 615, 15 N. E. 880.

[c] Such statutes relate "merely to the matter of the submission of such causes to the grand jury. After they have been once dismissed, they can be resubmitted only by direction of the court; that is, the court can require the grand jury to again investigate the charge, only by directing it to be resubmitted. But the power of the grand jury in the premises is not dependent upon the order or direction of the court; its powers and duties are prescribed by other provisions of statute. . . . The general nature of the powers and duties imposed upon the grand jury by these provisions is in no manner qualified or limited by section 4290." State v. Collis, 73 Iowa 542, 35 N. W. 625, followed in Marshall v. State, 84 Ark. 88, 104 S. W. 934; State v. Reinhart, 26 Ore. 466, 38 Pac. 822, wherein the court said: "It is also claimed that the power of the grand jury is at an end when it returns an indictment into court, and that it cannot afterward return another indictment against the same defendant for the same offense, unless by order of the court the case is resubmitted to them. We can find no warrant in law for this contention. By their oaths grand jurors are bound to true presentment or indictment make of all crimes committed within their county that shall come to their knowledge (Hill's Code, §1236); and in discharge of this obligation they not only have the right, but it is their duty, to return a new indictment against a defendant, if, in their opinion, the former indictment, which is still pending and undisposed of, is defective or insufficient, unless some proceeding has been had on such indictment which amounts to a bar to further prosecution. This is said to be the better and more usual practice (Perkins v. State, 66 Ala. 457; Stuart v. Commonwealth, 28 Gratt. 950); and the power of the grand jury in this respect is not dependent upon the order of the court resubmitting the cause to them. State v. Collis, 73 Iowa 542, 35 N. W. 625."

10. Com. v. Swanger, 108 Ky. 579, 57 S. W. 10 (holding §170 of the Criminal Code providing for order of court for resubmission of cause upon sustaining of demurrer on designated grounds is not mandatory upon the court, which may refuse such order): People v. Rosenthal, 197 N. Y. 394, 401, 90 N. E. 991. See People v. Clements, 5 N. Y. Crim. 288.

[a] "By the express command of the statute a judgment sustaining a demurrer is a bar to a further prosecution for the same offense unless such an order is made." People v. Rosenthal, 197 N. Y. 394, 401, 90 N. E. 991.

[b] Pending the demurrer, or after submission of the case to the jury and before verdict, the grand jury has no power to investigate the same charge or find a second indictment without a court order. People v. Bissert, 71 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630.

[c] In Alabama, on sustaining a demurrer to an indictment, if the defendant will not consent to an amendment, the court may order another indictment to be preferred at the same or at a subsequent term. Code, 1907, §7156; Cunningham v. State, 117 Ala. 59, 23 So. 693.

[d] In Kentucky, unless the demurrer is sustained because it appears the offense was not committed within the jurisdiction of the court, or the indictment improperly charges more than one offense, or contains matters constituting a legal defense, the commonwealth is entitled to have the cause submitted to another grand jury. Com. v. Shelby, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 781, 38 S. W. 490, under Crim. Code, §170.

[e] Granting of Order Discretionary.—(1) Although the resubmitting of the case after a demurrer is sustained rests in the discretion of the court (Ex parte Williams, 116 Cal. 512, 48 Pac. 499), (2) the refusal of the court to so submit to another grand jury, where the defendant has not been put in jeopardy, is not a bar to an investigation by another grand jury. Com. v. Swanger, 108 Ky. 579, 57 S. W. 10. See State v. Peterson, 61 Minn. 73, 77, 63 N. W. 171, 28 L. R. A. 324, holding that the dismissal of an indictment on the motion of the county attorney after the same has been attacked by demurrer is not equivalent to a decision of the court sustaining the demurrer, so as to prevent the case from being resubmitted to the same or another grand jury, without the order of the court.

[f] Order of Resubmission Determines Validity of Subsequent Indictment.—The right to find a new indictment and its validity does not depend upon the custody of the accused but depends solely upon the order resubmitting the charge to a new grand jury after the original indictment has been defeated upon demurrer. People v. Carson, 155 Cal. 164, 171, 99 Pac. 970; People v. Bissert, 117 App. Div. 118, 75 N. Y. Supp. 630.

[g] Order cannot be made until after the court has disposed of the [a] In Com. v. Clune, 162 Mass. 206, 38 N. Cas. 111, it was held that the discharge of a jury, after they have rendered a verdict against a prisoner, but which verdict is adjudged to be a nullity, because it was not duly perfected, and therefore set aside as insufficient, is no bar to a prosecution under the same or a new indictment.

d. Order of Court.—While under statutes in some states, a cause cannot be resubmitted to a grand jury, without an order of court, upon a dismissal thereof, by the grand jury,³¹ or upon the sustaining of a demurrer to the indictment originally returned,³² such statutes do not prevent the same or another grand jury from subsequently returning a new indictment against the accused, without any order of court, provided the defendant has not been previously put in jeopardy.³³

Though the court orders a second information to be filed, an indictment may be found instead.³⁴

e. Effect.—At common law it was not necessary that any disposition be made of the first indictment before the accused could be placed on trial under a second indictment for the same offense;³⁵ and the prosecution may now, in the absence of a statute upon the subject, proceed upon either indictment at the election of the prosecution,³⁶ petitioner was therefore liable to be tried for any and every offense of which he had not been acquitted on the first indictment. It was a matter of no moment whether such trial took place on the first or on a new indictment. After the new trial granted, the commonwealth might have entered a nolle prosequi in the case, and have proceeded on a new indictment; or even while the first was pending, a second indictment for the same offense might have been found, because the mere finding of one indictment is no bar to another, even for the same offense. The accused cannot be tried on both, but the commonwealth may elect on which it will proceed; the better practice, however, being to withdraw the first, and proceed to trial on the second."

Consolidation of Indictments.—Under proper circumstances the court may order two or more indictments to be consolidated into one before proceeding to trial,⁴⁸ although two persons are jointly charged in each indictment;⁴⁹ but the court cannot consolidate indictments setting out distinct felonies, not provable by the same evidence, and in no sense resulting from the same series of acts,⁵⁰ even though the defendants they grew is identical. State v. Johnson, 12 Ala. 840.

[b] When two indictments against the same defendant are so diverse as to preclude the same evidence from sustaining both, and when each sets out an offense differing in all its elements from that charged in the other, they are not for the "same offense" or "matter" within the meaning of §2130 of Mansfield's Digest, although they both relate to the same act, or transaction. State v. Hall, 50 Ark. 28, 6 S. W. 20.

[c] In State v. Clark, 32 Ark. 231-236, the court said: "It seems to be the law in England, that if a man steal two pigs at the same time, he may be indicted for stealing one of them and if acquitted, indicted for stealing the other. But the Americans have not favored this splitting of an offense, and the harassing of the accused by several indictments for part of the same offense."

[d] The decisive test as to whether or not one offense has been split up and charged in separate indictments is whether the same testimony will support both charges. State v. Johnson, 12 Ala. 840.

In construing the Act of February 26, 1853, ch. 80, §1, reading: "Whenever there are or shall be several charges against any person or persons for the same act or transaction . . . the whole may be joined in one indictment in separate counts; and if two or more indictments shall be found in such cases, the court may order them consolidated," the court held that this did not authorize the consolidation of separate indictments against different persons even when the offense was joint and when they might have been jointly indicted in the first instance. United States v. Durkee, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,008.

Discretion of Court.—In McElroy v. United States, 164 U. S. 76-80, 17 Sup. Ct. 31, 41 L. ed. 355, the court said: "Under the third clause relating to several charges 'for two or more acts or transactions of the same class of crimes or offenses,' it is only when they 'may be properly joined' that the joinder is permitted, the statute thus leaving it for the court to determine whether in any given case a joinder of two or more offenses in one indictment against the same person 'is consistent with the settled principles of criminal law.'" App. 71-74, 34 Pac. 734, the court said: "The acts done may result in the commission of several different statutory or common-law crimes, but wherever the felonies are separate and distinct, and not provable by the same evidence, and have been committed at different times, so that they can in no sense be deemed to result from the same series of acts, they may not be joined in one indictment; and consequently, if several indictments be found, the court is powerless to order the cases consolidated."

[a] In Kalloch v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 229, 237, the court, after reviewing a number of cases holding that "another indictment pending for the same offense constitutes no ground of abatement," said: "It is true, that all the foregoing cases refer to indictments, but the rule is equally applicable to an information, as the latter is simply designed to serve the purpose and take the place of the former. Each is but an accusation, in legal form, of the offense with which the prisoner stands charged, and for which he is to be placed upon trial. We can, therefore, see nothing in the provisions of the Penal Code, or in the general principles of law, applicable to proceedings in criminal cases, which in any manner affect the regularity and validity of the second information, on the ground above stated."

See the title "Preliminary Examination."

[a] The quashing of the old information does not carry with it the preliminary examination and hence a new examination is not necessary to support a new information. State v. Hasledahl, 3 N. D. 36, 53 N. W. 430; State ex rel. Barnes v. Second Dist. Court, 36 Utah 396, 403, 104 Pac. 282.

[b] There must be a second examination (1) to support a second information filed against the accused when the first information was set aside upon the ground that the accused was be upon the same complaint upon which the former information was based.⁶³

b. Time for Filing.—Statutes sometimes expressly provide a certain period within which a new information may be filed after the first has been quashed.⁶⁴

A statute providing for the filing of an information within a specified period after preliminary examination and commitment has no reference to the time of filing of a new information after the first information has been set aside or a demurrer sustained thereto.⁶⁵

c. Order of Court.—An order of court is not required to authorize the filing of a new information, after the first has been dismissed upon the motion of the district attorney.⁶⁶

But under statutes in some states, upon the sustaining of a demurrer to an information, a new one cannot be filed by the prosecuting officer without the direction of the court.⁶⁷ An order extending leave to the not legally committed. Ex parte Baker, 88 Cal. 84, 25 Pac. 966. (2) The court in People v. Kilvington (Cal.), 36 Pac. 13, in commenting on §997 of the California Penal Code allowing new informations without a further or new examination, says: "That the reasoning in Ex parte Baker, 88 Cal. 84, should be confined to cases in which the information is set aside for causes other than merely technical, and susceptible of remedy without impairing the substantial rights of a defendant."

[c] Where the accused is a fugitive from justice an information may be filed against him without a preliminary examination by §69 of Kansas Crim. Code, and if said information is lost or destroyed a second information may be filed although there has not even yet been held the first preliminary examination; and regardless of the fact that there is no original information preserved. State v. Plowman, 28 Kan. 569.

63. Johnson v. State, 19 Tex. App. 545; Goode v. State, 2 Tex. App. 520.

64. See generally the statutes.

[a] §30 of the Penal Code of Georgia providing that if an indictment is found within the time limited and is quashed for any informality, a new indictment must be filed within six months from the time the first is quashed, applies interchangeably to indictments, presentments and accusations. And if an information is filed within six months after the quashing of the indictment although after the two-year period for the filing of an original information the information is not barred by the statute of limitations. Crawford v. State, 4 Ga. App. 789, 797, 62 S. E. 501.

[b] In California the district attorney has a reasonable time after the direction of the court in which to file the new information. People v. Arberry (Cal.), 114 Pac. 411.

[c] Such a Statute Is Mandatory. Ex parte Fowler, 5 Cal. App. 549, 555, 90 Pac. 958.

65. People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 76 Pac. 1028; People v. Holmes, 13 Cal. App. 212-216, 109 Pac. 489; Ex parte Fowler, 5 Cal. App. 549, 556, 90 Pac. 958.

66. People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 50 Pac. 15.

67. People v. Jordan, 63 Cal. 219; State ex rel. Barnes v. Second Dist. Court, 36 Utah 396, 104 Pac. 282; State v. Crook, 16 Utah 212, 51 Pac. 1091.

[a] Where by statute (Cal. Penal Code, §1008) it is necessary for the court to order a new information or indictment to be filed, it is not necessary for the court to render an opinion that the objection to the first information could be overcome by filing another. People v. O'Leary, 77 Cal. 30, 18 Pac. 856.

[b] Order of Court Resubmitting Charge After Demurrer.—The order of the court granting the county attorney leave to file a new information, whether made at his request or not, is tantamount to the resubmission of the matter to him after a demurrer has been sustained to the first information and district attorney to file a new information is insufficient in such case. There must be an express direction that such be done.⁶⁸

d. Effect of Filing Second Information.—Under some decisions, when as a result of the second filing there are two informations pending for the same offense, the prosecutor must elect upon which he will proceed and the remaining one is quashed or dismissed;⁶⁹ but under other authorities the filing of a subsequent information for the same offense merely suspends the operation and force of the former.⁷⁰ Under the latter cases, upon the quashing of the second information, the first revives.⁷¹

e. Information Succeeding Indictment.—An information may be filed before,⁷² or after a quashal,⁷³ or nolle prosequi of an indictment charging the same offense;⁷⁴ but not after the refusal of a grand jury such order is, in effect, a compliance with the provisions of §§7745, 7746, 7747 of the Idaho Rev. St. In re Pierce, 8 Idaho 183, 67 Pac. 316.

[c] Leave of Court Presumed.—In State v. Garland, 65 Wash. 666, 118 Pac. 907, Mount, J., says: "Although it does not appear that an order of court was made granting the permission to file a new information, we must assume that such permission was had, because the court treated the new information as filed and so considered it."

[a] Cooley, J., in Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9, 15, says: "It can hardly be seriously contended that there can be two informations properly on file in any case; and a prosecuting officer who adopts the practice stated must be prepared to support his case upon either. It certainly cannot rest with him, at any particular stage of the case, to say which shall and which shall not constitute the record; much less can that question be made to rest upon the oral testimony, which must always necessarily be uncertain, as to which of the two happened to be taken up by the prosecuting officer when the prisoner was arraigned or tried. Under the general rule relating to criminal proceedings—that doubts are to be solved in favor of the accused—he has a right to point out and rely upon the defects in either; and the clerk was right in this case in sending up with the return the information supposed to be defective."

[a] The ruling on the motion to quash the indictment cannot be drawn in question on the trial on the information. State v. Cooper, 96 Ind. 331.

74. Dye v. State, 130 Ind. 87, 29 N. E. 771; Reg. v. Mitchel, 3 Cox C. C. (Eng.) 33.

[a] After a nolle prosequi is entered and a prosecution on indictment is thereby ended, the accused may be prosecuted by information if the grand to find an indictment therefor, according to some,⁷⁵ though not all authorities.⁷⁶

The information should not be tried while the indictment is pending.⁷⁷

3. Necessity for New Indictment on Second Trial.—If, upon a trial on an indictment charging an offense, a conviction is had for a lesser offense necessarily included in the higher, and that conviction is set aside and a new trial granted, there is no necessity for a new indictment for the purpose of retrying the accused for the lesser offense,⁷⁸ although it has been held proper to enter a nolle prosequi as to the indictment, charging the higher degree of offense, and to prefer a new indictment for that degree of offense upon which the defendant was convicted, and for which he is to be retried.⁷⁹

VII. LOST OR MUTILATED INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS AND COMPLAINTS.—A. SUPPLYING OR SUBSTITUTING.—1. Injury has been discharged and the court is in session. Dye v. State, 130 Ind. 87, 29 N. E. 771.

75. State v. Boswell, 104 Ind. 541, 548, 4 N. E. 675, wherein the court said: "The failure of the grand jury to find an indictment does not, of course, work an acquittal of an accused person, nor does it prevent his arrest upon an affidavit made by any person competent to make an ordinary affidavit, nor does it prevent a preliminary examination from being held the second time and an order entered placing him under recognizance, but it does prevent the prosecuting attorney from driving him to final trial upon an information."

76. See Rea v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 269, 105 Pac. 381, wherein it was contended that the lower court erred in overruling the motion of defendant to quash an information upon the ground that the identical offense charged therein had been "previously investigated by the grand jury, and that they refused to find an indictment against the defendant thereon, and that the offense had not been again referred to the grand jury by the court, and that no leave had been granted by the court to file the information herein." The court after quoting the statutory provision that the dismissal of a charge does not prevent its being again submitted to a grand jury as often as the court may direct, said: "This statute has no application to offenses prosecuted by information, and the court did not err in overruling the motion to quash the information upon this ground."

77. State v. Schenk, 238 Mo. 429, 442, 142 S. W. 263.

[a] Trial To Be on One Only. Where there is an indictment and information pending at the same time for the same offense the prosecutor can proceed to trial upon only one and the other must be nollid. State v. McKinney, 31 Kan. 570, 574, 3 Pac. 356.

[b] Mo. Rev. St., 1909, §5055, reading: "But that mode of procedure which shall be first instituted by the filing of the indictment or information for any offense shall be pursued to the exclusion of the other, so long as the same shall be pending and undetermined," simply means that the information shall not be tried while the indictment is pending—the latter must be dismissed. State v. Schenk, 238 Mo. 429, 442, 142 S. W. 263.

78. Thus upon a conviction of manslaughter under an indictment charging murder, the indictment does not become functus officio so as to prevent a second trial for manslaughter on the same indictment, though a prosecution for murder is forever barred. dictments.—The overwhelming weight of authority recognizes the right of the court to substitute properly proved copies of indictments that have been lost, destroyed, mislaid, or stolen,⁸⁰ or so mutilated as to be unintelligible.⁸¹

In some states the power of the court in this respect is said to rest in the court's inherent power to protect and preserve its own records.⁸² In still other jurisdictions the courts have held that the statutes providing for the restoration of lost pleadings and records generally are broad enough to cover the loss of indictments,⁸³ while in other jurisdictions, the subject is regulated by special statutory provisions, specifically providing for the substitution of lost indictments and other criminal pleadings.⁸⁴

Instead of substituting a lost indictment, however, a new indictment may properly be found.⁸⁵

3. Complaints.—The rule permitting the substitution of a copy, where the original has been lost, has been held applicable to criminal complaints.⁸⁹

B. PREREQUISITES TO SUPPLYING OR SUBSTITUTING.—1. Proof or Suggestion of Loss.—It would seem that the loss of the original indictment, information or complaint should be shown before the substitution of a copy is permitted.⁹⁰ Indeed, the statutes in at least one state provide that the substitution may be made upon the suggestion of such loss by the prosecuting officer.⁹¹

2. Proof of Copy.—In order to substitute a copy for a lost indictment, information or complaint, the copy must be proved to be at least a substantially correct reproduction of the original.⁹²

[a] The rule of practice under the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, quoted supra, was stated in Burrage v. State (Tex. Crim.), 44 S. W. 169, as follows: "The rule of practice under this state has been held to require the presentation of a formal motion alleging the loss of the indictment, and asking permission to substitute the same. This should be accompanied by a copy of the indictment, and a written statement by the district or county attorney that it is substantially the same as the indictment lost. The statute does not require, but we think the better practice would be to serve notice on defendant of the motion to substitute. On the trial before the court the judge adjudicates the matter; and if satisfied of the existence and loss of the original indictment, and that the copy presented is a substantial copy of the one lost, he should make a formal order or judgment substituting the same for the original indictment. This judgment should be entered in the minutes of the court, and constitute a part of the record."

[b] The prosecuting officer should make his suggestion of loss in writing, and such writing should set out the facts. Clampitt v. State, 3 Tex. App. 638.

[c] Such suggestion need not be sworn to, however, in the absence of a statute requiring it. See Clampitt v. State, 3 Tex. App. 638.

[a] Where it does not appear of record that the original indictment was certified by the clerk, the court obtains jurisdiction to try the case on a sub-

3. Order and Minutes of Court. — Though statutory provision may alter the rule,⁹³ the substitution is made as a rule only upon an order of court.⁹⁴ So too, to supply by substitution the loss of an indictment, stituted copy of a lost indictment. It is necessary to show, however, that the substituted copy was a true copy. State v. Stevisiger, 61 Iowa 623, 16 N. W. 746; State v. Rivers, 58 Iowa 102, 12 N. W. 117, 43 Am. Rep. 112.

[b] "The substituted indictment or information should be a correct copy (1) of the original if possible, but if the data on hand is not sufficient from which to make an exact copy, a copy as near as may be is sufficient." State v. McFadden, 42 Wash. 1, 84 Pac. 401. (2) Copy need be only substantially correct. State v. Paul, 87 Mo. App. 47. See State v. Gardner, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 134, 49 Am. Rep. 660; Morrison v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. 437, 66 S. W. 779.

[c] The copy was sufficiently proven to be correct in State v. Rivers, 58 Iowa 102, 12 N. W. 117, 43 Am. Rep. 112.

[d] A court having power to substitute a copy for a lost indictment, it will be presumed from the record that it acted regularly, and not arbitrarily; consequently an objection by the defendant that the order of substitution was made upon the ex parte affidavit of the district attorney, without giving the defendant opportunity to object to the sufficiency of the proof, cannot prevail where the defendant was present and objected to the order though not to the validity of the copy. Com. v. Becker, 14 Pa. Super. 430.

93. Under a statute providing for the entry of all indictments returned by the grand jury in full upon the minutes of the court, and that "a copy of the minutes shall be as good and valid as the originals, if at any time the latter are lost, destroyed, misplaced or purloined," there is no error in allowing a copy of an indictment to be read on the trial, although there be no order of substitution. Epperson v. State, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 291, wherein the court said: "Previous to the statute, a copy of a lost record could only be substituted by order of the court, adjudging that the original was lost and authorizing the substitution of the copy. State v. Harrison, 10 Yer., 542.

The object of the statute was to do away with the difficulties attending the supply of such papers, as shown by the case cited, and to provide a record copy of the original. 'At any time,' when the exigency arises, the copy may be used. The copy is virtually equal to the original. . . . The court must determine when the exigency arises under the statute, and this may be done as well by action during the trial as by special order."

94. State v. Burks, 132 Mo. 363, 34 S. W. 48; Graham v. State, 43 Tex. 550; Brooks v. State, 55 Tex. Crim. 122, 113 S. W. 920; Burrage v. State (Tex. Crim.), 44 S. W. 169; Strong v. State, 18 Tex. App. 19; Magee v. State, 14 Tex. App. 366; Rogers v. State, 11 Tex. App. 608; Clampitt v. State, 3 Tex. App. 638.

[a] Where an order of court is necessary to substitute a lost indictment, the clerk even though requested by the prosecuting attorney, has no authority to incorporate the lost pleading in the record without notice to the defendant, and permission of the court. State v. Burks, 132 Mo. 363, 34 S. W. 48.

[b] An agreement between the prosecuting officer and the counsel for the accused that a copy "is a true substituted indictment in this cause" is not a substitution, nor a judgment of substitution, where such is required, but is only evidence which can be used in regard to a proper substitution. Carter v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 608, 58 S. W. 80.

[c] Nunc Pro Tunc Order.—Where the order of substitution by the court was actually made and the judge neglected to sign it, a nunc pro tunc order may be made at a subsequent term without notice to the defendant, substituting the lost indictment. Moore v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. 336, 107 S. W. 540. Compare Reed v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. 572, 61 S. W. 925, holding that an information lost prior to trial cannot be substituted nunc pro tunc.

[d] In Beardall v. State, 9 Tex. App. 262, the following order was made and entered: "In this cause comes the minutes of the court must show not only the suggestion of the loss⁹⁵ and leave of the court to substitute, where such is necessary,⁹⁶ but must also show that substitution has been in fact made.⁹⁷

C. OBJECTIONS TO SUBSTITUTION. — Since the substitution of a lost indictment, information or complaint is a judicial act, it is competent for the defendant to contest such substitution if he sees fit,⁹⁸ by objecting to the same at the time it is sought to be made,⁹⁹ or by motion to quash or abate, when the substitution has been made.¹ But the right to demand the original indictment will be waived when not exercised before the jury is sworn,² and following the general rule of appellate practice, the appellate court will not consider the matter the county attorney, F. C. and moves the court to grant him leave to file a substantial copy of the original indictment, which said motion having been duly considered by the court is granted; whereupon it is ordered by the court that the said copy of the said indictment be filed among the papers of the case.' This order was not sufficiently certain, either in pertinently and positively identifying the substituted instrument, or in the declaration of the fact that it was substituted." The court said "In such a procedure nothing should be left to inference or intendment. However, the order can yet be amended, or another entered nunc pro tunc, fully and completely establishing the fact of the proposed substitution."

95. Carter v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 608, 58 S. W. 80.

96. Graham v. State, 43 Tex. 550; Brooks v. State, 55 Tex. Crim. 122, 113 S. W. 920. And see Carter v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 608, 58 S. W. 80, wherein the court said: "And it has been held, so far as we are aware, since Graham's Case, 43 Texas 552, that the failure of the record to show that the substitution of the lost indictment was made by permission of the court will be fatal on appeal."

[a] "The record must speak the fact affirmatively that the substitution as proposed by the county attorney was made. It may be urged, however, that there appears from the record enough from which to presume that in fact the substitution was made. If, in fact, the court did not order and adjudge the substitution there was no indictment in the case; hence we cannot indulge in presumptions; the record must speak that fact, not by way of inference, but directly and affirmatively. Turner v. State, 7 Texas Ct. App. 596; Crosswell v. Byrnes, 9 Johns. 286; Beardall v. State, 9 Texas Ct. App. 266." Rogers v. State, 11 Tex. App. 608, 619.

[b] Entry Insufficient.—(1) An entry of "Loss of papers suggested; the county attorney has leave to substitute the same" and a copy of the substituted indictment is not sufficient. Clampitt v. State, 3 Tex. App. 638. (2) It should be shown that the suggestion was made in open court. Graham v. State, 43 Tex. 550.

97. Graham v. State, 43 Tex. 550; Carter v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 608, 58 S. W. 80; Burrage v. State (Tex. Crim.), 44 S. W. 169; Magee v. State, 14 Tex. App. 366; Rogers v. State, 11 Tex. App. 608; Beardall v. State, 9 Tex. App. 262; Turner v. State, 7 Tex. App. 596.

[a] "Presumptions will not be indulged to verify a substituted indictment, or supply a proper order in the minutes of the trial court. . . . The record, therefore, must affirmatively show as a fact that the substitution was actually made." Carter v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 608, 58 S. W. 80.

unless the proper objection to the substitution was made at the trial.³

D. EFFECT OF FAILURE TO SUPPLY LOSS.—If the original indictment, information or complaint is lost, upon a showing of such fact, there should be a substitution of a copy; if this is not done,⁴ or cannot be done,⁵ there can be no valid trial and conviction, and a court of review will reverse the case.

E. NECESSITY FOR SECOND ARRAIGNMENT OR PLEA ON SUBSTITUTION. Upon the substitution of a lost indictment, information or complaint, the trial proceeds without a second arraignment of or plea by the accused.⁶

F. EFFECT OF FINDING ORIGINAL AFTER SUBSTITUTION OF COPY. If the original indictment, information or complaint is found, according to the rule laid down in some cases, it is the proper paper on which to have the trial, notwithstanding a copy has been established in its place;⁷ but upon this proposition the authorities are not without apparent, if not real, conflict.⁸

3. Long v. People, 135 Ill. 435, 25 N. E. 851, 10 L. R. A. 48; State v. Lovitt, 243 Mo. 510, 147 S. W. 484.

[a] The court said in Wolff v. State (Tex.), 23 S. W. 799: "The practice seems to be well settled in this state that when, in a motion for a new trial, it is shown to the trial court that the indictment is lost, it shall be the duty of the prosecution to substitute the indictment, and, on failure so to do, the court will reverse the case (Pate v. State, 21 Tex. App. 197, 17 S. W. Rep. 460, and cases cited); that a conviction will not be allowed to stand when the transcript fails to bring up an indictment or information. If there was no indictment substituted, how is the defendant to move in arrest or this court to pass upon it? The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded."

5. Hitchcock v. State, 21 Ind. 279, holding if an indictment or information is lost and copies cannot be given, the judgment of the court, upon a trial and conviction, will be reversed.

[a] If an indictment is destroyed, and there is no record of it, the defendant cannot be tried at all upon it. It is otherwise where there is a record thereof; he may then be tried on a certified copy, taken from the record. Buckner v. State, 56 Ind. 207, 210.

[a] In Reddan v. State, 4 Greene (Iowa) 137, a second indictment was found but was quashed, upon finding the first. Held that the first was fully reinstated and unimpaired by the proceeding under the second.

8. Branson v. State, 99 Ga. 194, 24 S. E. 404 (holding that where a paper has been by a proper order established as a copy of a lost indictment or presentment, the copy until such order has been set aside, stands in lieu of the original. If such order is not revoked, the mere finding of a paper purporting to be the lost original cannot in any manner affect the legal status of the case); State v. Lovitt, 243 Mo. 510, 147 S. W. 484 (holding that where a new information has been filed and after the trial is held the original information was found, even though there was a difference between the two, the original information was an abandoned pleading and constituted no part of the record of the case).

[a] In Pennsylvania if both the lost and the substituted copy are in court the defendant may be tried on either. Rosenberger v. Com., 118 Pa. 77, 11 Atl. 782.

VIII. FORMAL REQUISITES.—A. INDICTMENT OR PRESENTMENT.⁹—1. In General.—An indictment consists of three prominent features, (1) the caption, (2) the charge, and (3) the conclusion.¹⁰

2. Necessity and Form of Writing.—It is no objection to the validity of an indictment that it is in form partly written and partly printed,¹¹ even though it is declared by statute that an indictment is a "written" statement accusing a person therein named of some act or omission declared by law to be an offense.¹² Nor does the fact that an indictment is partly written in pencil vitiate it,¹³ since one wholly written in pencil would be legal.¹⁴

It is not necessary that all the counts of an indictment should be written upon the same sheet of paper,¹⁵ nor, when on separate sheets, that they should be attached together.¹⁶

Superfluous and unnecessary matter upon an indictment, but not a part of it, does not vitiate it.¹⁷

9. As to formal requisites of information, see infra, VIII, B.

10. State v. Moore, 24 S. C. 150, 58 Am. Rep. 241.

As to the caption, see infra, VIII, A, 3.

As to the charge, see infra, VIII, A, 5, and IX.

As to the conclusion, see infra, VII, A, 6.

[a] Reason.—"The word 'writing' or 'written,' under our statutes, civil as well as criminal, includes 'printing.'" O'Bryan v. State, 27 Tex. App. 339, 11 S. W. 443.

[b] A printed form, with its blanks properly filled in in writing is a sufficient compliance with statute. Winn v. State, 5 Tex. App. 621.

12. O'Bryan v. State, 27 Tex. App. 339, 11 S. W. 443 (under Code Crim. Proc., art. 419); Winn v. State, 5 Tex. App. 621.

13. Jones v. Com., 124 Ky. 26, 97 S. W. 1118; May v. State, 14 Ohio 461, 45 Am. Dec. 548.

[a] A letter added to a word in an indictment, in pencil mark, before the indictment is found, does not vitiate the indictment. May v. State, 14 Ohio 461, 45 Am. Dec. 548, wherein the court said: "The court might not feel disposed to tolerate the practice of drawing an entire indictment with a lead pencil, because it is more liable to be effaced and obliterated than if drawn with ink; but there is no statute in Ohio, nor any rule of common law, nor any principle of ordinary sense, that will avoid an indictment merely because one letter in the whole indictment is added to some one word in pencil, and that letter making no difference, neither in sound, sense, nor effect, in the word to which it is joined. An indictment is usually written, but it may be printed; and is nevertheless valid. It is commonly drawn with black ink; but if written in red, blue, or yellow, who is bold enough to say that it is such a departure from usage that it vitiates the indictment? We apprehend no one. Why, then, should a single letter, in a legible pencil mark, have such an effect?"

15. State v. Lennon, 8 Rob. (La.) 543.

[a] Where the indictment consisted of two papers pinned together and returned into court as one bill, the two charges, being numbered, first count and second count, it was not objectionable on that account. State v. Robbins, 123 N. C. 730, 736, 31 S. E. 669, 68 Am. St. Rep. 841, wherein the court said: "Even if they had been returned as separate indictments and at different terms, they could be treated as different counts in the same bill, if germane." See also Com. v. Nailor, 29 Pa. Super. 275.

16. State v. Lennon, 8 Rob. (La.) 543.

17. Minn.—State v. Johnson, 37

That an indictment is prepared by piecing together portions of two instruments is not ground for quashing the same, if it is in fact found by the grand jury and returned as thus prepared.¹⁸ Nor does the accidental mutilation of an indictment by cutting it into several pieces, when the parts can be united without the omission of even a word, render it unfit to be the basis of further proceedings.¹⁹

3. Caption.—a. Nature and Purpose.—The caption is the heading of the indictment,²⁰ or more properly, the preamble to the record,²¹ when the indictment is removed from an inferior to a superior court,²²

[a] Thus, mottoes or business cards are not part of the indictment (1) and though unnecessary and unseemly, do not vitiate it. Owens v. State, 25 Tex. App. 552, 8 S. W. 658; West v. State, 6 Tex. App. 485; Winn v. State, 5 Tex. App. 621. (2) And putting the date when and the place where found, at the end of an indictment, after the conclusion, does not vitiate it, such date and place being no part of the indictment. State v. Johnson, 37 Minn. 493, 35 N. W. 373.

[b] Nor does the placing of numbers, indicating the several counts of an indictment, on the margin thereof, work any injury to the defendant. Webb v. State, 63 Tex. Crim. 207, 140 S. W. 95.

18. Jenkins v. State, 64 Tex. Crim. 88, 141 S. W. 223; Jenkins v. State, 64 Tex. Crim. 85, 141 S. W. 224; Jenkins v. State, 64 Tex. Crim. 86, 141 S. W. 222, wherein the court said: "While this is rather unusual, at least so far as we are aware, in the manner of writing an indictment, or preparing it, still it is not shown, or attempted to be shown, that this was not done by the grand jury and that they took this method of writing the bill, or having it prepared, instead of writing it in the usual way. If the foreman of the grand jury filed the indictment as thus prepared, and returned it in this manner into court, there is no sufficient reason why the indictment should be quashed. It is rather a novel way of preparing an indictment, yet, if the grand jury prepared the indictment in this condition and returned it into court, it would constitute no reason why it should be quashed. Under such circumstances, it would be the act of that body and valid."

As to lost or mutilated indictments generally, see supra, VII.

19. Com. v. Roland, 97 Mass. 598, such as the pronouncing of sentence thereon.

[a] The accidental mutilation of an indictment by cutting it into several pieces does not destroy its identity or prevent its being restored to a condition in which it can be rendered intelligible and substantially complete in all essential particulars. Com. v. Roland, 97 Mass. 598.

[b] If when the parts are united, as can readily be done without danger of mistake, by joining together words which have been severed, there is no material omission of any averment, or even word, contained in the indictment as presented in court by the grand jury, it cannot be properly said that the indictment is destroyed or in such condition as to be rendered unfit to be the basis of further proceedings. Com. v. Roland, 97 Mass. 598.

[a] Historical.—The caption had its origin in this way: Where an inferior court, in obedience to the mandate of the king's bench, transmitted the indictment to the crown office, it showing the history of the proceedings preliminary to its finding.²³ Particularly, its office is to state the style of the court, the time and place when and where the indictment was found, and, in England and some of the states, the jurors by whom it was found.²⁴ It is not strictly a part of the indictment itself,²⁵ though upon this proposition was accompanied with its history, naming the court where it was found, the jurors' names by whom found, and the time and place where found. All this was entered of record by the clerk of the superior court, immediately before the indictment, and was called the caption, but it was no part of the indictment itself. People v. Bennett, 37 N. Y. 117, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 89, 93 Am. Dec. 551, citing 1 Stark. Cr. Pl. (2d ed.) 233. See also McBean v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 20; Robinson v. Com., 88 Va. 900, 14 S. E. 627.

[b] In McBean v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 20, the court said: "In England indictments are found by inferior courts, and transmitted for trial to the Court of King's Bench. The inferior court sends up with the indictment a formal history of the proceedings, describing the court before which the indictment was found, the jurors by whom and the time and place when and where it was found. This history of the proceedings of the inferior court is called the caption, and is entered of record immediately before the indictment: 1 Bishop on Crim. Proc., §146; 1 Chitty Cr. Law 267-8. Consequently the caption is that part of the record which comprehends the judicial history of the cause to the time of finding the indictment."

31. United States v. Beebe, 2 Dak. 292, 301, 11 N. W. 505.

[a] Says the court in State v. Moore, 24 S. C. 150, 58 Am. Rep. 241, through Simpson, C. J.: "There has been some contrariety of opinion as to where the caption ends and the indictment begins, and especially whether the words, 'the jurors, etc., on their oaths, present,' constitute a part of the caption or a part of the indictment. In England, and in many of the states following the English practice, these words are termed the 'commencement' of the indictment, and not considered to be a part of the caption. But in our state it has been distinctly held that they are part of the caption; that it is mere introductory matter, and constitutes no portion of the indictment. In the case of State v. Creight, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 169, Trezevant, J., said the caption ends with the words 'upon their oaths, present,' and Grimke, J., said (p. 170),

'It was resolved in an earlier unreported case (State v. James Johnston), that the part of the indictment here in question was a part of the caption.'"

[b] Necessity of Determining Where Caption Ends and Indictment Begins.

The caption being no part of the indictment, it follows that the law in reference to defects in the caption, and not the rule in reference to the charging part or the conclusion, should govern where objection is made on account of alleged defects. And it must be remembered that the rules in such cases are quite different. In reference to the charging part, the law is extremely strict, requiring the closest observance to established forms and precedents, and demanding a complete description of such facts and circumstances as constitute the crime, without inconsistency or repugnancy. Manner, time, and place must be alleged, and even particular words and phrases sometimes, though they may seem technical, must be used. This strictness is, however, not required in reference to the caption, the distinction in the two cases being that the charging part is really the matter which the accused is called upon to meet and answer, while the caption is a mere history or record of the case, up to the finding of the indictment, containing the name of the court, county and state, and where and by whom the indictment has been found. It is important for the accused to be informed fully as to the crime with which he is charged, so that he can prepare for his defense; and it is important, too, to the court that the crime charged should be set out with great particularity, so that, in looking at the record, it may decide whether the facts charged constitute an offense within its jurisdiction, whether a conviction will warrant punishment, and what the punishment shall be. These reasons, however, do not apply to the caption, and, accordingly, as we have said, the rule as to the caption is much more liberal than as to the chargboth being by them called "caption," with the result of a great deal of confusion.³²

b. Necessity for.—It has been held in some jurisdictions that generally no caption is necessary to an indictment,³³ or that, if omitted altogether, or if imperfect, the general records of the term will supply the defect.³⁴ The practice, however, is to affix a caption to every indictment, whether necessary or not.³⁵

Several Counts.—The caption to an indictment applies to the indictment as a whole, and to each count thereof.³⁶ It need not be repeated

ing part of the indictment. State v. Moore, 24 S. C. 150, 58 Am. Rep. 241.

32. A great deal of confusion exists in the books, because the distinction between the commencement and the caption of an indictment, which has always existed in England, has not uniformly been maintained here. People v. Bennett, 37 N. Y. 117, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 89, 93 Am. Dec. 551.

33. See the following cases: Ia. State v. Smith, 148 Iowa 640, 127 N. W. 988, may be omitted without in any way affecting the validity of the indictment. Ky.—Com. v. Drewry, 126 Ky. 183, 189, 103 S. W. 266, not an indispensable part of the indictment. La.—State v. Marion, 15 La. Ann. 495; State v. Lyons, 3 La. Ann. 154; *State v. [a] At best, it is merely a form, and neither takes from nor adds to the validity of the indictment. Com. v. Drewry, 126 Ky. 183, 189, 103 S. W. 266.

[b] The necessity for it cannot arise (1) while the prosecution is pending in the court in which the bill is preferred. State v. Marion, 15 La. Ann. 495; State v. Lyons, 3 La. Ann. 154; State v. Folke, 2 La. Ann. 744; State v. Kennedy, 8 Rob. (La.) 590; People v. Jewett, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 314; People v. Myers, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 6, 29. And see Robinson v. Com., 88 Va. 900, 14 S. E. 627. (2) Nor is a caption necessary where an indictment is merely removed from a superior to an inferior court. Loomis v. People, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 601. (3) But it is necessary that a caption should accompany every indictment removed into a superior court, in order to show that the court which took the indictment had legal authority and power to do so. People v. Jewett, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 314; Tipton v. State, Peck (Tenn.) 308. And see People v. Bennett, 37 N. Y. 117, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 89, 93 Am. Dec. 551; People v. Fish, 4 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 206, 212; *People v. E. 627. (4) So too, a caption has been held necessary where the court acts under a special commission. State v. Haddock, 9 N. C. 461.

[c] A record of an indictment and conviction is not admissible in evidence to incapacitate a witness, without a proper caption, since it does not appear in such case to have been found by persons competent to find it. Cooke v. Maxwell, 2 Stark. 183, 3 E. C. L. 368.

[d] An unnecessary written caption constitutes no part of an indictment and does not impair its validity, if otherwise valid. Owens v. State, 25 Tex. App. 552, 8 S. W. 658; Winn v. State, 5 Tex. App. 621.

[a] In State v. Williams, 2 McCord (S. C.) 301, the court said: "The caption of an indictment must set forth with sufficient certainty, the court in which the jurors by whom and also the time and place at which the indictment was found. This strictness was required, that it might appear facts which give the court jurisdiction, when the court in which the indictment is found is a court of general jurisdiction.⁴³

(II.) Style of Court Where Found.—The caption must set forth, with sufficient certainty, the style of the court in which the indictment was found and presented,⁴⁴ that it may appear on the face of the indictment on the face of the indictment that the court had jurisdiction of the offense, that the jurors were sworn, and that the court was holden at the proper time. (2 Hawkins, P. C. 360-1-2-3.) [a] But see State v. Marion, 15 La. Ann. 495, holding that the caption to an indictment is dispensed with in that state, inasmuch as a prosecution therein is never removed from one to a higher tribunal, and that the indictment itself need not describe the court before which it is found.

[b] If it be a special court, it should be so stated. State v. Williams, 2 McCord (S. C.) 301.

[c] Where the court is properly styled the "district court," it is objectionable to style it as a "circuit court." Mau-zau-mau-ne-kah v. United States, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 124, 39 Am. Dec. 279.

[f] The caption was insufficient in Com. v. Mackin, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 593, 29 Leg. Int. 85, wherein the court held that the omission of the words "of the peace" after the word "sessions," in the caption which was as follows: "In the Court of Quarter Sessions for the city and county of Philadelphia," was fatal to the indictment, since it did not appear therefrom that the proceeding was in any court recognized in the state.

The indictment is not defective, however, because the name of the court is not set forth at length in the caption.⁴⁷ On the contrary, if the name of the court is, either in express words, or by necessary implication, specified either in the caption or in the body of the indictment, it is sufficient in some states.⁴⁸

[a] In Texas, (1) it must appear from the indictment itself, and not merely from the record, that the same was presented in a court having jurisdiction thereof, by express provision of statute. Tex. Code Crim. Proc., art. 439 (in the district court of the county in which the grand jury is in session); Mathews v. State, 44 Tex. 376 (defect amendable); State v. Kilgough, 32 Tex. 74; Thomas v. State, 18 Tex. App. 213, 221. (2) The indictment is insufficient where such fact does not appear by direct affirmative allegation (Thomas v. State, supra), (3) only, however, where timely objection is taken on that ground. Long v. State, 1 Tex. App. 466; Hauck v. State, 1 Tex. App. 357. (4) Where there are two such courts in the same county, it need not be shown in which one it was presented. Sargent v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 325, 33 S. W. 364.

[b] Sufficient Averment.—Where the indictment recited that "The grand jurors for the county of B, state aforesaid, duly organized as such at the May term, A. D. 1892, of the district court of said county, upon their oaths in said court present that A," etc., it was held that this directly and affirmatively alleged that the indictment was presented in the district court of the county having jurisdiction. Bell v. State (Tex. Crim.), 20 S. W. 362. 47. Harrison v. State, 55 Ala. 239; Bonner v. State, 55 Ala. 242.

[a] Compare, however, caption held insufficient in Com. v. Mackin, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 593, 29 Leg. Int. 85, as described in note 44, [f], supra.

48. St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. State, 108 Ark. 423, 157 S. W. 1155, under Kirby's Dig., §2243. In this case, the caption of the indictment contained the style of the case, but the name or style of the court was not mentioned in the caption. The preliminary clause

It has also been held that where the record shows in what court the indictment was found, it is not absolutely necessary to state the name of the court in the caption.³⁰ Nor is the omission fatal, where statutes provide that the indictment shall not be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits.³¹

An erroneous description of the court in the caption does not necessarily vitiate the indictment,³² especially when the record shows that the court in which it was found had jurisdiction of the offense,³² for

of the indictment contained a specification that the presentation was by "the grand jury of Cross County." It was held that this was by necessary implication a statement that it was in the circuit court of that county, and sufficient, as a specification of the name of the court, to comply with the requirements of a statute providing that an indictment must contain the title of the prosecution, specifying the name of the court in which the indictment is presented.

[a] Since there can be but one court in the county by which a grand jury is impaneled, and that is the circuit court, a specification that the presentation is by "the grand jury of Cross County," is by necessary implication a statement that it is in the circuit court of that county. St. Louis etc. R. Co. v. State, 108 Ark. 424, 147 S. W. 1155.

[b] Where the indictment shows that it was found by the grand jury of W. county, and the orders of the court show that it was presented by the W. county grand jury to W. circuit court, and returned to and filed in that court, the failure of the indictment to give the title of the prosecution to specify the name of the court is not fatal, the object of the statute having been accomplished, although the letter was not complied with. Spredalle v. Conn., 7 Ky. L. Rep. 529.

49. State v. Craft, 164 Mo. 631, 647, 65 S. W. 280; State v. McIntire, 74 Mo. 322; State v. Duncan, 80 Mo. 109, 120; Ryba v. State, 6 Mo. App. 800; also Cuba v. United States, 132 U. S. 211, 221, 14 Sup. Ct. 313, 38 L. ed. 472.

50. Cuba v. United States, 132 U. S. 211, 221, 14 Sup. Ct. 313, 38 L. ed. 472, notes 14, 15, 16.

[a] An indictment is not fatally defective because it does not state upon its face the particular court in which it was found, where the statute provides that no indictment shall be deemed invalid or in any manner affected for want of a proper or perfect venue, nor for want of any venue at all, nor for any defect or imperfection which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits, for it cannot be said that this defect in any way tends to the prejudice of the rights of the defendant. State v. Craft, 164 Mo. 631, 647, 65 S. W. 280.

[b] It is an imperfection in matter of form within the meaning of statutes providing that an indictment is not insufficient by reason of an imperfection in matter of form, which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant, upon the merits. People v. Haren, 35 Misc. 590, 72 N. Y. Supp. 205.

51. Ala.—Collins v. State, 3 Ala. App. 64, 58 So. 80, indictment not defective because caption recites that it was preferred by the county court of C. county instead of by the county court of C. Ky.—Mitchell v. Com., 106 Ky. 602, 51 S. W. 17, "Liquor Circuit Court" for "Lauder Circuit Court." Mo.—State v. McIntire, 73 Mo. 322. Mont.—United States v. Upham, 2 Mont. 170.

52. That the court is described as the "Cate Circuit Court" instead of the "Circuit Court of Cole County" is immaterial. State v. McIntire, 73 Mo. 322. See also State v. England, 13 Mo. 186, where the caption read "In the Hickman Circuit Court," and the indictment was held good.

53. United States v. Upham, 2 Mont. 170.

[c] Where the court described in any defect in the title of the court as stated in the caption may be supplied by reference to the record.⁵² Mere surplusage in the description of the court in the caption will not vitiate the indictment.⁵³

Name of Judge.—The name or names of the judge or judges holding court at the time when the indictment was found need not appear in the caption, in the absence of any statute requiring it,⁵⁴ though upon the caption was "The United States district court of the Territory of Montana for the second judicial district," the fact that it was described as a "United States" district court did not invalidate it, where the record accompanying the indictment showed that the indictment was found by the grand jury of the district court of the second judicial district of the Territory of Montana, which court had undoubted jurisdiction to find such indictment. United States v. Upham, 2 Mont. 170. To same effect is Jackson v. United States, 102 Fed. 473, 479 42 C. C. A. 492 (holding that the designation of the territorial court of Alaska as a district court "of the United States" would not invalidate it); Pickett v. United States, 1 Idaho 522 (wherein the indictment designated the venue as "In the district court of the United States of America, for the first judicial district of Idaho territory," and the court held that the insertion of the phrase "the United States of America" was unnecessary, but would be treated as nothing more serious than surplusage).

[5] That an indictment is headed "In the Circuit Court of the United States, etc.," whereas all of the proceedings were had in the "District Court," as appears from the record, does not vitiate it. Such recital does not have the force and effect of returning the indictment to the circuit court. Analogously, an order remitting it to the district court is neither necessary nor proper. Bohrtner v. United States, 108 Fed. 36, 47 C. C. A. 191.

[6] Conn. v. Mullen, 13 Allen (Mass.) 551, omission of the word "court" immaterial where by reference to the record sent up from the "competent court" it appeared that indictment was returned to that court, and that it was verified by the clerk upon the back of the indictment as having been so returned. Commonwealth v. Matthews v. State, 44 Tex. 376; Lang

v. State, 1 Tex. App. 466; Ogden v. State, 1 Tex. App. 357.

That errors or deficiencies in the caption may be supplied by the record, see 1879, VIII, A. 3, 4.

[7] Pickett v. United States, 1 Idaho 522. In this case the court should have been designated as "In the district court of the judicial district of Idaho territory," whereas it was designated as "In the district court of the United States of America, for the first judicial district of Idaho territory." It was held that the insertion of the words "the United States of America," though entirely unnecessary, could "be treated as nothing more serious than mere surplusage, and could indicate nothing further than that the district court was sitting upon the business of the United States, which is more properly deduced from the subject matter of an action, than from any title or name given to the court."

[8] The number of the judicial district is no part of the title of the district court, and, if erroneously given, may be rejected. State v. March, 22 Minn. 67.

[9] Where the caption of an indictment was: "Fourth Judicial Circuit, Mineral County Court," in the Circuit Court of Mineral County," the insertion of the word "Court" after the words "Mineral County" was a clerical error, and must be treated as mere surplusage, and is cured after verdict. State v. Gilmore, 9 W. Va. 541.

this proposition there is authority, principally in the earlier cases, to the contrary.⁵⁶ In no event is it necessary to show his or their appointment.⁵⁷

(III.) Time When Found.—The caption must set forth with sufficient certainty the time at which the indictment was found and presented,⁵⁸ that it may appear on the face thereof that the court was held at the proper time.⁵⁹ Where such time is set forth with sufficient the purpose of ascertaining the style of the court and the names of the judges, neither of which need appear on the indictment.”

[b] The court in Tenorio v. Territory, 1 N. M. 279, said: “It is not necessary to mention the name of the judge. Some states may require this, but the court is not aware of any act of our own legislature that requires it.”

[c] It will be presumed to have been held before a judge or judges, forming a competent court. Pennsylvania v. Bell, Add. (Pa.) 156, 174, 1 Am. Dec. 298.

[d] Omission Cured by Statute.—In Caha v. United States, 152 U. S. 211, 221, 14 Sup. Ct. 513, 38 L. ed. 415, objection was made to the form of the indictment in that its caption did not show the organization of the court, or who composed it or who were present as constituent parties thereof when the indictment was returned. The court, after reciting the showing made by the record, said: “With reference to all these objections it is enough to refer to section 1025 of the Revised Statutes, as follows: ‘No indictment found and presented by a grand jury in any district or circuit or other court of the United States shall be deemed insufficient, nor shall the trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant.’”

[b] An indictment purporting in the caption to have been found at a session of court held on a certain certainly to a common intent, legal subtleties and niceties are to be disregarded.⁶⁰

Term of Court.—In stating the time when the indictment was found, it is not now absolutely necessary in all jurisdictions that there be a statement of the term of court at which it was found.⁶¹ In regard to all cases of offenses committed before the term, the caption may be general,⁶² the time being properly stated as of the term,⁶³ without alleging when it began,⁶⁴ or particularly describing it.⁶⁵ It, however, day, which is the first day of the term, is good, although in fact found on a subsequent day of the same term. Com. v. Hamilton, 15 Gray (Mass.) 480.

[c] An objection that the indictment does not show that it was found or presented at a term of court, general or special, cannot be raised for the first time after conviction. It should be taken by motion before plea entered, a failure to do so precluding defendant from taking it later. Territory v. Pratt, 6 Dak. 483, 43 N. W. 711. As to objections generally, see infra, XIV; as to waiver of objections generally, see infra, XV.

60. State v. Brisbane, 2 Bay (S. C.) 451, cited with approval in Tenorio v. Territory, 1 N. M. 279, wherein the court, after stating requisites of caption, said: "In the caption of this indictment these requirements have been substantially complied with; certainty to a common intent is all that is required. Any legal technicality should be disregarded, especially after a trial upon the merits."

It appears from other portions of the record.

[a] It is sufficient if this fact appears upon the back of the indictment or presentment where the return of the grand jury is entered. Nixon v. State, 121 Ga. 144, 48 S. E. 966.

62. Com. v. Gee, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 174, 180. And see State v. Wentworth, 37 N. H. 196.

[a] The term of holding court was sufficiently designated in the following cases: Seal v. State, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 286, 1 Mor. St. Cas. 473; Hudson v. State, 40 Tex. 12; Wright v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 367, 33 S. W. 973; Garling v. State, 2 Tex. App. 44.

W. 542 (motion to quash because indictment incorrectly gave the term at which the grand jury was impaneled properly overruled); Grayson v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 629, 34 S. W. 961 (statement as to time surplusage, which may be stricken out, and incorrect statement as to such time need not be amended).

[a] The term of the court is sufficiently stated, when the day is given on which the indictment was found. People v. Beatty, 14 Cal. 566.

[b] An indictment, purporting to have been found at a term of court begun on a certain date, is not necessarily vitiated by the fact that such date was a legal holiday. Com. v. Chamberlain, 107 Mass. 209; Com. v. Cotton, 11 Gray (Mass.) 1.

65. It need not state that it was found at a "trial term" of the court. It is sufficient to state, generally, that it was found at a "term" of the court. State v. Wentworth, 37 N. H. 196, 206.

[a] That the term is designated as a "special term," whereas the record shows that the indictment was pre-

the offense was committed after the commencement of the term, it would seem to be the more regular and proper mode, to recite that the indictment was found at a court begun and held on a day named, and continued by adjournment to another day named, being after the time of the alleged offense.⁶⁶

That the term is stated in figures, instead of words, is not objectionable,⁶⁷ especially if it appears from the record that an indictment was found at that term.⁶⁸

Conclusiveness of Time Stated.—The date of the finding of an indictment specified in its caption is not conclusive,⁶⁹ but it may be shown by competent evidence, including other records of the court, that it was in fact found at a later date.⁷⁰ Nor does a mistake in the time or term stated in the caption vitiate the indictment, where the records of the court show the true time,⁷¹ it being amendable in this ferred at an "adjourned term," does not invalidate the indictment. State v. Sweeney, 68 Mo. 96.

[b] Term at Which Grand Jury Sworn.—Where the caption stated that the indictment was found at a designated term by certain men duly impaneled, sworn, and charged as grand jurors in and for the county at said term, it sufficiently showed that the indictment was found at the term of the court at which the grand jury was sworn. Engleman v. State, 2 Ind. 91, 52 Am. Dec. 494.

W. 1051, holding that where record showed true time of finding indictment, a recital in the indorsement of filing that it was filed at a date prior to the committing of the offense must be treated as a typographical or other error, not fatal to the prosecution.

[a] "An indictment which, taken in connection with the certificate indorsed thereon by the clerk at the time of its return into court, distinctly shows the dates of its presentment by the grand jury, and of the commission of the offense charged, is not invalidated by a defective description, in its caption, of the term of court at which it was found. It has already been held that an omission, in the caption, of the date of holding the term is immaterial, when the date of its presentment and return is stated in the clerk's indorsement, and the allegation in the indictment of the time of the commission of the offense is consistent therewith. Commonwealth respect,⁷² since such a recital is no part of the indictment itself.⁷³

(IV.) Place Where Found.—The caption must set forth with sufficient certainty the place where the court was held and the indictment found.⁷⁴ This requires in some states a showing not only that the court in which the indictment was found was held for the proper county,⁷⁵ but also that it was held at the proper place within such county.⁷⁶

It is true that where the name of the county is given in the body of the indictment, it is not indispensable that it be named in the

v. Hines, 101 Mass. 33. We are of opinion that a like rule applies to this case, and that the statement, in the caption, of the year in which the court was held, may be rejected as inconsistent with the dates stated in the clerk's certificate and in the body of the indictment, and as manifestly erroneous." Com. v. Smith, 108 Mass. 486.

[b] A variance between the caption and the record in stating the term of the court at which the indictment is found is not fatal thereto, since the caption is no part of the indictment. Mitchell v. State, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 514, 528.

margin,⁷⁷ also that the omission to give such name in the caption of an indictment, otherwise perfect in form, does not render it fatally defective.⁷⁸ Nor is an omission to name the place within the county where the court was held a fatal defect where the record shows such fact.⁷⁹ It is otherwise where neither the record nor the caption shows such fact.⁸⁰ Where the place is set forth with sufficient certainty to a common intent, legal subtleties and niceties are to be disregarded.⁸¹

[b] Presumption.—Where an indictment recites that it was found in the circuit court of a county embracing two judicial districts, without specifying in which district it was found; and it appears from the term at which the indictment was found and the date of the clerk's indorsement upon it when it was received from the grand jury, that it was returned at a time when the court for one of the districts could alone legally be in session, it will be presumed from the indictment itself that it was returned by a grand jury legally empaneled in that district. *Helt v. [b] Though a statute directed that the court be held at "Conwayborough," an indictment was not bad where it alleged that it was found at "Horry Court House," instead of "Conwayborough," since both terms in one sense meant the same, the term "Horry Court House" being the more precise term. State v. Thayer, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) 286.

[c] Since the entire term of a court of record is, in contemplation of law, but one day, if it appear that the court was opened at the right place, the legal presumption is that it was held at the same place for every other day of the term, including the day on which the indictment was found. Smith v. State, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 9.

[d] A misrecital of the proper county is not ground for arresting the judgment, where a statute exists curing defects or imperfections in matter of form after verdict. State v. Sprinkle, 65 N. C. 463.

[e] Where several counties are attached for judicial purposes, (1) an indictment for a crime committed in one county may be entitled as in all of the counties (State v. Stokely, 16 Minn. 282), (2) and entitling it in the name only of the county to which

The omission of the name of the state from an indictment, where the name of the county is inserted in the margin or body thereof, is not a fatal defect.⁸²

(V.) Statements as to Grand Jury.⁸³ — (A.) ORGANIZATION, NAMES AND NUMBER.⁸⁴ — The caption or formal parts of the indictment served on the defendant need not show the organization of the grand jury.⁸⁵ If the facts necessary to show its proper organization appear, either in the face of the indictment, or in the caption of the record of the court, it is sufficient.⁸⁶

More particularly, it need not be stated in express terms that the the others are attached is a defect of form merely. State v. McCarthey, 17 Minn. 76. Compare Giebel v. State, 28 Tex. App. 151, 12 S. W. 591, holding that it is not necessary for an indictment to recite that it is presented in a court of both of two counties joined for judicial purposes, the statute contemplating that the indictment shall be entitled as of the county in which the crime is committed and the indictment found.

82. State v. Blakely, 83 Mo. 359 (failure to name the state in the margin of the indictment does not vitiate it); State v. Lane, 26 N. C. 113 (not cause for arresting the judgment).

[a] In State v. Blakely, 83 Mo. 359, the court said: "While it is said in 1 Bish. Cr. Proc., sec. 383, that it is customary to write the name of the state in the margin in connection with the name of the county, it is also said 'that the name of the state need not appear either in the margin or in any other part of the indictment.'"

[a] These are matters which properly appear only in the minutes of the court. Curtis v. State, 9 Ala. App. 36, 63 So. 745.

[b] That record should show the organization of the grand jury, see 10 STANDARD PROC. 663.

[c] "It is not necessary that all preliminary steps of drawing, selecting and empanneling a grand jury shall appear in an indictment, nor would a statement in an indictment that such steps had been taken be in any manner conclusive. The selecting and empanneling of the grand jury are matters that are done in court prior to the finding or presentation of any indictment, and such proceedings are recorded in the journals of the court, and the records of the court is the proper place to look for such proceedings rather than in the formal parts of an indictment. The reasons that at one time existed for requiring these matters to be set forth in the indictment have long since ceased to exist, and in fact never did exist in this territory." Jones v. Territory, 4 Okla. 45, 51, 43 Pac. 1072. And see also Keith v. Territory, 8 Okla. 307, 57 Pac. 834; Fisher v. United States, 1 Okla. 252, 31 Pac. 195.

[d] If Necessary, Omission Cured by Statute.—The fact that the caption does not show the organization of the court in which it was found, or who composed it, or who were present as constituent parties thereof when the indictment was returned is not fatal under a statute providing that no indictment shall be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form, which does not tend to the prejudice of defendant. Caha v. Jones, 9 N. J. L. 357, 371, 17 Am. Dec. 483.

[b] No allegation as to the time when they were impaneled is necessary. If one be made, it may be disregarded as surplusage. State v. Miller, 6 Ind. App. 653, 34 N. E. 27. An imperfect statement thereof does not render the indictment bad. State v. Miller, 6 Ind. App. 653, 34 N. E. 27.

[d] That an indictment states that the grand jurors were "sworn, chosen and selected" instead of "selected, chosen and sworn," is no ground for quashing it. Wesley v. State, 65 Ga. 731.

[e] Omission To State Grand Jury Attending Court.—An indictment is not bad for its omission to state that the grand jury was attending the court. State v. Williams, 49 W. Va. 220, 38 S. E. 495, the court saying: "That is not material in the indictment. It does not enter into the charge. Its omission could not prejudice the accused. The record shows an indictment in that court, and the grand jury must have been attending that court and none other."

92. Under the Georgia statutory form for indictments, it is mandatory that the names of the grand jurors should be inserted in the indictment, a failure to do so rendering it fatal where timely objection is taken, as where taken on arraignment and before pleading. Willerson v. State, 14 Ga. App. 451, 81 S. E. 391, explaining dictum in Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 362, names.⁹³ It is essential, however, that the record of the case should show these names.⁹⁴ Formerly, a different rule prevailed, and the indictment, or more properly the caption, which is really no part of the indictment, was required to set forth the names of the grand jurors making the finding.⁹⁵

Where required, a merely clerical error in writing one of the names will not invalidate the indictment.⁹⁶ Nor is it a fatal objection that one of the names as it appears in the caption or indictment is substantially different from his name in the panel,⁹⁷ if in reality it is

[a] In Dawson v. People, 25 N. Y. 399, the court said: "Most of the writers on criminal law state that the indictment (or rather the caption, which is not a part of the indictment), should contain the names of the grand jurors by whom the presentment is made, and the usual, but not constant practice has been to insert them."

[b] In Mahan v. State, 10 Ohio 232, the court said (obiter): "It is a well-settled principle, in criminal pleading, that it must appear, in the caption of an indictment, that it was taken upon oath, and that the names of all the jurors by whom taken must be stated." This case is now considered as overruled on this point, however, by Fouts v. State, 8 Ohio St. 98.

[c] For development of English doctrine, see 1 Saund. 248, note, 85 Eng. Reprint 292.

[d] Time for Objection.—If the objection that the grand jurors are not named in the caption is available at all, it must be presented on motion to quash or by demurrer; it is too late to present it upon writ of error after judgment. Dawson v. People, 25 N. Y. 399; Rex v. Aylett, 6 Ad. & El. 246, 33 E. C. L. 148. As to time for taking objections generally, see infra, XIV.

97. State v. Dayton, 23 N. J. L. 49, 61, 33 Am. Dec. 270; State v. Norton, 23 N. J. L. 33, 47 (defect amendable).

[a] In the Norton case (23 N. J. L. 33, 47), the court said: "It is by no means clear that the names, as they appear in the panel and in the caption, are not idem sonans, . . . and the objection upon this ground not well founded. But, admitting the names to be substantially variant, when there is no pretense that the persons named in the panel and in the caption are really different, but the difficulty consists in the misprision of the clerk in preparing the caption, the court will not permit the indict-

the same person. It is no objection that the initials of their Christian names are used.⁹⁸

Number of Grand Jurors.—It is not necessary either in the caption or in the body of the indictment to expressly recite the number of the grand jury,⁹⁹ it being sufficient if the indictment show upon its face that the grand jury were of the number and qualifications required by law.¹ Nor is it necessary to state that the indictment was found by the concurrence of twelve or more grand jurors.²

(B.) QUALIFICATIONS.³—It is not necessary to state the qualifications of the grand jurors at length in the caption,⁴ it being sufficient if it be shown that they were good and lawful men, which comprehends every necessary qualification prescribed by law.⁵ Nor is accuracy in making this showing important, where every facility is offered to ment upon that ground to be quashed. The caption is amendable.”

[b] Variance Between Indorsement and Body of Indictment.—Where an indictment was indorsed “true bill,” and signed by B as foreman of the grand jury, the fact that in the body of the indictment the names of the grand jurors were stated, but the word “foreman” was written opposite the name of another juror, was no reason for quashing the indictment. *Taylor v. (2) On the other hand, if there be a recital as to the number of grand jurors, and it shows that the grand jury was not composed of the number required by law, the indictment is invalid and a conviction thereunder cannot be sustained. Fitzgerald v. State, 4 Wis. 395.

showed that fact, and that it was not necessary to repeat it on the face of the indictment.

[b] The signature of the foreman, certifying the indictment to be a true bill, legally imports that it was so found. Turns v. Com., 6 Mete. (Mass.) 224, 233. And see United States v. Laws, 2 Low. 115, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,579; Watts v. Territory, 1 Wash. Ter. 409; McAllister v. Territory, 1 Wash. Ter. 360. As to signature of foreman, see infra, VIII, A, 7, a.

[c] Cured by Statute.—The fact that an indictment does not contain an express recital that it was found by the concurrence of at least twelve jurors is not fatal under a statute providing that no indictment shall be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant. *Caha v. From County Where Indictment Found.—The caption or other formal part of the indictment should show that the grand jury were of the county where the court was held, for which they were sworn and the indictment found, the omission being a fatal defect in some states.⁸ Indictments have been sustained, however, without the name of the county being stated in describing the grand jury in the body of the

The court said: "This is equivalent to saying the jury was impanelled, etc., in open court; and as the Circuit Court possesses extensive and general criminal jurisdiction, it was not necessary to specify the qualifications of the jurors, or to allege that they were good and lawful men. All this must be presumed."

[a] For otherwise, they had no right to find it. Tipton v. State, Peck (Tenn.) 307.

[b] This fact must be shown by the caption, or it will be presumed that the court has proceeded without authority. Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116.

[c] In Territory v. Sevailles, 1 N. M. 119, the indictment only described the grand jurors as the grand jurors of the territory of New Mexico, inquiring for the county of San Miguel, etc. It did not show that they were chosen, impaneled, and sworn for the county. The court said: "They may have been chosen, impaneled, and sworn in any other county, as far as instrument, where the county and court have been properly designated in the caption or title thereof.⁹ And it has been definitely settled that when it is stated in an indictment that the jurors were duly summoned and impaneled and sworn in and for the body of the county, the fact that they were of the county for which they were sworn is made to appear with sufficient certainty.¹⁰

the caption gives information to the defendant. It is true that the record may supply deficiencies in the caption in some cases, but it is conceived that if the caption undertakes to describe the grand jurors, that the law will require the territory to make a full and legal description."

[d] It need not specify the place (1) at which the grand jury was sitting (Rosencrans v. United States, 165 U. S. 257, 263, 17 Sup. Ct. 302, 41 L. ed. 708), (2) nor that they are residents in the division of the district in which they served. May v. United States, 199 Fed. 53, 117 C. C. A. 431. (3) It is no more necessary to state this latter fact than it is to state that they were of legal age, or that they were citizens, or that their names had been placed in the box by the clerk and commissioner and then been drawn alternately from the box by those officials. May v. United States, 199 Fed. 53, 117 C. C. A. 431.

[e] As to necessity for showing that court was held in the proper county, see supra, VIII, A, 3, c, (IV).

9. See the following cases: Ala. Morgan v. State, 19 Ala. 556. Ga. Stevens v. State, 76 Ga. 96, wherein an indictment headed "Georgia, Liberty County," was held to show that the grand jury was drawn and sworn in that county. Ind.—*State v. [a] Reason.—A grand jury in regular organization and attendance upon a court is necessarily one within and for the county where the court is in session. State v. Buralli, 27 Nev. 41, 71 Pac. 532.

10. Keith v. Territory, 8 Okla. 307, 57 Pac. 834. And see Leonardo v. Territory, 1 N. M. 291; Fizell v. State, 25 Wis. 364. Compare Tipton v. State, Peck (Tenn.) 307, holding that this should appear by a direct statement, not be made out by inference.

[a] Where it is recited that the grand jurors "were impaneled, sworn, and charged to inquire within and for the body of the county of B," the caption is not defective because it does not state in express terms that they were taken from such county. Leonardo v. Territory, 1 N. M. 291, wherein the court said that "it is an extremely forced presumption, to suppose that a grand jury thus designated were taken from a neighboring county, instead of the county where the trial took place and in which the offense was committed. It is therefore sufficiently apparent that they were properly and legally selected."

[b] A recital that the grand jury were "inquiring in and for the county of D." is sufficient, without the words "for the body of the county." Fizell v. State, 25 Wis. 364.

[c] If an indictment is found by the grand jurors, inquiring for the body of the proper county, it will be presumed, after trial, that they were performing their duties within the county when the bill was found. Com. v. Jackson, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 262.

[d] It was sufficiently shown that the indictment was found by a grand jury of the proper county in the following cases: Ind.—Howell v. State, 4 Ind. App. 148, 30 N. E. 714. Kan. *Wise v. (C.) SWEARING OF GRAND JURY. — The form of indictment prescribed by statutes in some states omits a recital of the swearing of the grand jury;¹¹ and it has been held that it is not necessary to the validity of an indictment that it should appear in the caption that the grand jury were sworn if it so appears in the body of the indictment.¹² Of course, formerly, it was usual, if not indeed essential, to recite in the caption or commencement that the grand jury were sworn, and such may still be the rule in some states in the absence of statutory

[e] Where an indictment was headed "Georgia, Liberty County," this was sufficient to show for what county the grand jurors were drawn and served, and of what county they were. Stevens v. State, 76 Ga. 96.

[f] An indictment purporting to be by "the grand jurors of the state of Ohio, inquiring of crimes and offenses within and for the county of Monroe," must be taken as found by a grand jury of that county, as well as for the state. Mackey v. State, 3 Ohio St. 362.

[g] Where the caption of the indictment showed that it was presented by a grand jury "taken from the body of the good and lawful men" of the first circuit court district of a county and state named, it sufficiently showed that the grand jury returning the indictment was impaneled from the proper district. Coleman v. State (Miss.), 40 So. 230.

[h] Where the caption describes the court, and the term at which it was returned, and then recites that it was found by "the grand jurors for the commonwealth on their oath," while the record shows the names of the grand jurors, the indictment was sufficient as against the objection that it does not appear on its face that it was made by the jurors of the county of venue. Com. v. Johnson, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 284.

[i] It is not objectionable that an indictment purports, on its face, to have been found by "the grand jury of said court," instead of said county, where the caption shows the venire, and the general organization of the grand jury. Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154.

[j] An erroneous designation of the grand jury in this respect is not fatal, especially where a statute provides that no indictment is insufficient by reason of a defect or imperfection in matter of form which does not tend to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits. Jackson v. United States, 102 Fed. 473, 481, 42 C. C. A. 452.

11. See the statutes, and Mo.—State v. Vincent, 91 Mo. 662, 4 S. W. 430, that they were empanelled, sworn and charged. N. Y.—People v. Reavey, 38 Hun 418, that grand jury was drawn or sworn not now required to be stated. Ore.—State v. Guglielmo, 46 Ore. 250, 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, 69 L. R. A. 466, under Bell. & C. Codes & St., §1304.

[a] Under the Texas code, it is not necessary that the indictment should state that the grand jurors were sworn. It is sufficient if it appears from the face of the indictment that it was the act of the grand jury of the proper county. Hart v. State (Tex. Crim.), 44 S. W. 1105; Vanvickie v. State, 22 Tex. App. 625, 2 S. W. 642; Chevarrio v. State, 17 Tex. App. 390.

[b] Of course, before the grand jury can enter upon the discharge of their duties, an oath is required to be administered to them, the form of which is generally prescribed by statute. State v. Guglielmo, 46 Ore. 250, 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, 69 L. R. A. 466. And see 10 STANDARD PROC. 627.

12. McBean v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 20; State v. Long, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 386, followed in Melton v. State, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 389; McClure v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 206, overruling State v. Fields, Peck (Tenn.) 140.

[a] It was expressly held, in the case of McClure v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 206, that the "recital in the indictment that the grand jurors were elected, empanelled, sworn and charged, will be sufficient," even if the caption omit to state that they were sworn. And this case was reviewed provisions upon the subject.¹³ It is not necessary, however, that the caption should allege that they were "then and there" sworn.¹⁴

If the indictment purports to be on the affirmation of some of the grand jurors, it must be shown¹⁵ that they were persons entitled by law and approved in the subsequent case of State v. Long, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 386.

13. At common law, it was essential that the indictment should state in the caption or commencement that the grand jurors presenting the same were sworn as such. Chevarrio v. State, 17 Tex. App. 390.

[a] If the caption shows that the jury found the bill upon their oaths, it need not state that they were sworn and charged. Rex v. Morgan, 1 Ld. Raym. 710, 91 Eng. Reprint 1373.

[b] The recital that the indictment was found "upon the oath" of the grand jury is usually found in the commencement, as distinguished from the caption. See infra, VIII, A, 4, b, (II).

[c] Where the indictment recites that the grand jury was selected, impaneled, sworn and charged, and that they on their oaths present, etc., this is enough, when the case arrives in the supreme court, to show the proper swearing of the grand jury. Powers v. United States, 223 U. S. 303, 312, 32 Sup. Ct. 281, 56 L. ed. 448, distinguishing Crain v. United States, 162 U. S. 625, 16 Sup. Ct. 952, 40 L. ed. 1097; and see Potsdamer v. State, 17 Fla. 895.

[d] An objection that the indictment does not show that the jurors were impaneled, charged, or sworn, cannot be raised for the first time after conviction, but should be taken by motion before pleading. A failure to do so precludes taking the objection later. Territory v. Pratt, 6 Dak. 483, 43 N. W. 711. As to objections generally, see infra, XIV; as to waiver of objections, see infra, XV.

[a] "Lord Hale, in the form which he has given, 1 Chitty's C. C. 327, has omitted the words, 'then and there,' which he probably would not have done, if he had deemed them material. Chitty himself is more explicit on this subject, and says in express terms, that these words are unnecessary, and cites many authorities in support of his position. 1 Chitty's C. L. 334." Shaffer v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 238.

[b] It need not be shown when and where they were so sworn. Vaughn v. State, 4 Mo. 530.

15. State v. Fox, 9 N. J. L. 244; State v. Harris, 7 N. J. L. 361; State v. Putnam, 1 N. J. L. 260.

[a] It must appear that they alleged themselves to be conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath, if such be the statutory exception. State v. Fox, 9 N. J. L. 244.

[b] Historical.—"The requirement that an indictment, when founded upon the affirmation of one or more grand jurors, should state that those persons were relieved from taking the oath by some statutory provision was recognized, with reluctance, by Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527, upon the authority of some older cases. The doctrine was accepted, with equal reluctance, by our supreme court, in the case of State v. Harris, supra (7 N. J. L. 361), upon the authority of an unreported case, known as Sharp's case. The doctrine was repudiated in Massachusetts, in the case of Commonwealth v. Fisher, 7 Gray 492. An objection to an indictment upon the same ground was ignored in the case of Reg. v. Mulcahey, L. R., 3 H. L. 306. So far as I have traced it, it has not, nor need it be now, passed upon by this court. . . . Inasmuch as the caption shows that all were sworn, there was no need of any further statement respecting the qualification of the jurors." State v. Moore, 75 N. J. L. 619, 68 Atl. 165.

[c] Waiver of Objection.—Objection on the ground that the caption does not set out such fact comes too late to take an affirmation in lieu of an oath, in some, but not all, jurisdictions.¹⁶

(VI.) Names of Parties.—Statutes in some states provide that the indictment must contain the title of the action, specifying among other things, the names of the parties.¹⁷ The omission of the names of the parties from the caption or a mistake therein is not a fatal objection, however.¹⁸ Nor will the indictment be set aside or quashed because it does not contain the title of the cause.¹⁹

(VII.) Name of Offense.—It is not necessary that the name of the offense be stated in the caption.²⁰ But if stated, the description of the offense in the body of the indictment must prevail over and control the description given in the caption, where there is a variance between them.²¹

the latter may be looked to in aid of the former.²⁹ So too, statutory provisions for the cure of defects or imperfections in indictments have been held to cure such objections to the caption as are curable.³⁰ Of course, if the caption be defective in an essential particular, and it is not aided by the record or by reference to the indictment, and is not curable by such statutes, there may be cases wherein it will vitiate the indictment.³¹

Mere surplusage in the caption may be rejected, it not vitiating the indictment.³²

4. Commencement.—a. Nature and Necessity.—The commencement of the indictment is to be distinguished from the caption thereof in many respects,³⁴ though like the caption, it is not, strictly speaking, a part of the indictment,³⁵ though a part of the record.³⁶ It is but a recital of certain preliminary facts, only necessary to be stated in order to render the instrument intelligible of itself, without having reference to the files and records of the court where it was found.³⁷ Accordingly, if it appears from the face of the record not only that the indictment is sufficient in form and substance, but that it was properly preferred by a lawful grand jury to a court having jurisdiction over the subject, it is sufficient although the commencement be wholly omitted.³⁸

b. What to Contain.—(I.) In General.—The forms of commencement vary slightly with the different jurisdictions, but are usually simply variations of the English form.³⁹ Where a statutory form is or not the grand jury was sworn where it is objected that the indictment fails to show such fact (Burchett v. United States, 194 Fed. 821, 114 C. C. A. 525; Noles v. State, 24 Ala. 672, 694), (4) or in aid of a defective description of the grand jury in the charging part of the indictment (State v. Buralli, 27 Nev. 41, 71 Pac. 532), (5) or to supply a defect or clerical error in the commencement thereof. Gater v. State, 141 Ala. 10, 37 So. 692.

[b] It may be referred to to show that the United States mentioned in the body of the indictment (1) are the United States of America (United State v. Boyden, 1 Low. 266, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,632). (2) Where the name of the county was fully set forth in the caption, a reference thereto in the indictment, as "in said county" was held proper to find the county where the offense was alleged to have been committed. Com. v. Edwards, 4 Gray (Mass.) 1. 39. In State v. Nixon, 18 Vt. 70, 46 Am. Dec. 135, the first objection urged to the indictment was, that it commenced: "The grand jurors for the people of the state of Vermont." The court said: "This is not the usual form of the commencement of indictments in this state; but nevertheless, it may be questioned, whether it is not more correct, than the one commonly used. The grand jurors in this state, as well as in Great Britain, are to inquire for all offenses in the county, for which they are returned: 2 Hawk. P. C., c. 25, p. 299. They are to present in behalf of and for the sovereign power, which is considered as the prosecutor for all public offenses; and hence the style or language of the indictment is not uniform. In England the form is, 'The grand jurors for our Lord the King on their oaths present;' in New York, 'for the people,' &c.; in Massachusetts, 'for the Commonwealth.' In some cases this part of the indictment is used only to designate the jury, who present,—as, 'The grand inquest of the United States for the district of Virginia;'—'The grand jurors of the United States in and for the body of the district of New York;'—'The grand jurors within and for the body of the county,' &c.; and this latter is the form usually adopted in this state, and in Connecticut. The better form, I think, is the one used in Georgia, found in 6 Peter's 528,—'The grand jurors, prescribed by statute,⁴⁰ a literal compliance with the form is not required, but only a substantial compliance therewith is necessary.⁴¹

That the name of the accused is not repeated therein is immaterial, in the absence of a statute requiring the same,⁴² as is an error in designating the name of the crime.⁴³

Several Counts. — If there be more than one count to an indictment, it is sometimes required that each additional count shall commence in a prescribed form.⁴⁴ Ordinarily, the words "the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present," are proper for introducing a new count, though they do not necessarily mean that a new count begins with them.⁴⁵ They should, however, only be employed for their one legitimate purpose, namely, that of beginning a new count.⁴⁶

sworn, chosen and selected for the county of ———, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia.' In this state, when we wish to designate the sovereign power, we usually say, The State of Vermont; but I apprehend it is as well to designate it by the term,—The People. . . . We cannot, therefore, attach any importance to this objection to the indictment,—considering it wholly immaterial whether the indictment commenced by saying, The grand jurors for the county, or for the state, or for the people of the state; and that either mode would be conformable to approved forms."

[a] For forms of commencement, see 9 STANDARD PROC. 605; 1 Bishop New Crim. Proc. 524; 2 Chit. Cr. Law 1; and the following cases: Fla. Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909, 947. La. *State v. 41. Kruger v. State, 1 Neb. 365. In this case, it was contended that the commencement or caption was defective because of the omission of the word "chosen," which was found in the form. It stated, however, that the grand jurors were "selected." The court said: "We think there has been a substantial compliance with the requirements of this section, which is all that is necessary. . . . the words 'chosen' and 'selected,' have, in common parlance, the same meaning. They are used synonymously by the best writers and speakers. The use of both words in this connection would be mere tautology, a needless repetition of the same thing."

[a] A commencement is sufficient, which is as follows: "The grand jurors for the county of Rice and State of Minnesota, upon their oaths present, etc.," though the form provided by statute is as follows: "A. B. is accused by the grand jury of the county of ———, by this indictment, of the crime of," etc. State v. Hinckley, 4 Minn. 345.

(II.) Recitals as to Grand Jury and Presentment by Them.⁴⁷ — It is not essential that the indictment should commence with the words "the grand jurors,"⁴⁸ though it is customary to do so;⁴⁹ it is sufficient if it commence with the words "the jurors," where the other entries in the record show that it was found by a grand jury.⁵⁰

The jurors are sometimes described in the commencement as being of the county or district for which they are inquiring; it is more usual to make the recital as to the venue in the caption, however.⁵¹

The omission of the word "present," so often found in the form of commencement, is not objectionable in some states.⁵²

Presentment Upon Their Oath or Affirmation. — At the common law, it was essential that the commencement should show that the indictment was presented upon the oath or affirmation of the grand jurors.⁵³ Such is still the rule in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁵⁴ though

[b] Reason.—No other jurors than grand jurors being authorized by law to find and return bills of indictment, the indictment, under this form of description, must be taken to have been found by the grand jury. Com. v. Edwards, 4 Gray (Mass.) 1, 6.

[b] The old forms of commencement usually began: "The jurors," etc. See 9 STANDARD PROC. 605.

52. State v. Freeman, 21 Mo. 481, where record shows presentment. Compare Vanvickie v. State, 22 Tex. App. 625, 2 S. [a] Said the court in State v. Guglielmo, 46 Ore. 250, 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, 69 L. R. A. 466: "The form usually prescribed for the commencement of an indictment was, after stating the venue, as follows: 'The jurors for our lady the Queen upon their oath present,' etc. 1 Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. *76. Sir Matthew Hale, in speaking of the caption of a written accusation, and of the necessity of stating therein the oath of the jurors, says: 'It must return that the indictment was made per sacramentum.' 2 Hale's P. C. 167."

[a] Omission matter of form only, however, for which objection must be taken before trial where it is provided that exceptions which go merely to the form of an indictment shall be the use of the usual phrase, "on their oath present" is not essential, if it appears from other equivalent expressions that it was so presented.⁵⁵ As indicated, however, under some statutes, it is not essential to state that the presentment was so made.⁵⁶

That an indictment purports to have been made upon the "oaths" of the grand jury, instead of "oath," is not objectionable.⁵⁷ Nor is it objectionable that the word "oath" is used, instead of "oaths," where the latter is considered proper.⁵⁸

Several Counts.—Where this requirement exists, it extends to all counts of the indictment, and each must show that it is so presented.⁵⁹ made before trial. Curtis v. People, 1 Ill. 256.

[b] Oath and Affirmation.—It is not objectionable that the recital be that the indictment is presented "upon the oath" of the jurors, when the fact is that it was presented upon the "oath and affirmation" of the jurors. Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 532, 567, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 42 L. ed. 568, defect, if it be such, rendered harmless by the curative provisions of section 1025, Rev. St.

[c] When some are sworn, and some are affirmed, it is sufficient for the indictment to be presented upon "their oath and affirmation," although not one of them has taken both an oath and an affirmation. Com. v. Fisher, 7 Gray (Mass.) 492.

[d] As to necessity for showing that grand jurors were persons entitled to take affirmations in lieu of oaths, see supra, VIII, A, 3, (VI), (C).

55. See the following cases: Fla. Potsdamer v. State, 17 Fla. 895. Mo. State v. Craig, 79 Mo. App. 412, wherein the indictment recited that the grand jurors were "impaneled, sworn and charged." Tenn.—McBean v. State, 3 Heisk. 20. Wis.—Byam v. State, 17 Wis. 145, wherein the jurors returned that "being impannelled, sworn and charged," they made the presentment.

[a] Thus, where after the recital that the grand jury were duly summoned, elected, sworn, etc., it is said that they "present and say," it is sufficient without expressly reciting such presentment to be "on their oath aforesaid." McBean v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 20.

[b] It is, at most, but matter of inducement, and not of the substance of the accusation. Byam v. State, 17 Wis. 145.

[c] Amendment.—Where the commencement recited that "the grand jurors impaneled and sworn," etc., "upon their ——— present," an amendment was allowed, inserting the word "oath." State v. Moore, 1 Ind. 548.

56. Vanvickle v. State, 22 Tex. App. 625, 2 S. W. 642; Chevario v. State, 17 Tex. App. 390 (sufficient if it appear from indictment that it is act of a grand jury of the proper county).

58. Wagner v. People, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 367, after verdict, such a defect would be cured by statute.

[a] The words "on their oath" are equivalent to the words "on their several oaths," and sufficient. Com. v. Johnson, Thach. (Cr. Cas. (Mass.)) 284.

59. State v. McAllister, 26 Me. 374; State v. Furgerson, 152 Mo. 92, 53 S. W. 427; State v. Wagner, 118 Mo. 676, 24 S. W. 219. In the last case, the court said: "The old and familiar rule is that 'every separate count should charge the defendant, as if he had committed a distinct offense,' etc. In a word, each count in an indictment must be complete in itself as to the description of the offense, and to each count must be prefixed a statement, that the jury supra accusatum suum alterius presentant, and without such commencement the count will be bad. The following authorities fully support these positions: 1 Chitty on Criminal Law 175, 249; 1 Bishop on Criminal Procedure (3d

(III.) Recital of Authority by Which Presentment Made.⁶⁰ — It is not necessary that the indictment should state that it is presented by the grand jury "in the name and by the authority of the state," in the absence of a statute or constitutional provision requiring it to be carried on in such manner.⁶¹ Statutory or constitutional provisions requiring all prosecutions to be so conducted exist in most states.⁶² Even under such provisions, however, according to the weight of authority, it is not essential that an indictment shall contain a recital in terms that the prosecution is by the authority of the state, where they do not expressly require it, it being sufficient if the record shows that the prosecution is so conducted.⁶³ It is otherwise, of course, if

[a] In State v. McAllister, 26 Me. 374, there was no reference in the third count to another count for the allegation, that it was presented upon the oath of the jurors. It alleged, that, "the jurors aforesaid for the State aforesaid do further present," without saying as aforesaid, or in manner aforesaid. In other words, there was nothing in the third count either of allegation or of reference, from which it could be made to appear to have been presented per sacramentum suum. It was held insufficient on this account. In State v. Vincent, 91 Mo. 662, 4 S. W. 430, where the third count recited "and the grand jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid," it sufficiently referred to the first count and was sufficient in this respect.

[b] In Huffman v. Com., 6 Rand. (Va.) 685, though the third count omitted to state that the grand jury "on their oath" present (the first two counts being regular in that respect), it was held that the objection was obviated by the fact that the record states, that they were sworn in open court.

Several Counts.—It is not required that each count shall commence "in the name and by the authority of the state," even though the indictment must make such showing.⁶⁵ If the first count contains a proper commencement, it may always be looked to to supply, if necessary, such allegation, as to the commencement of any subsequent count.⁶⁶ cite in terms that the prosecution is carried on in the name and by the authority of the state. And see infra, VIII, B, 4.

[b] In Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909, 948, the court says, "The Constitution says all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the state. It is not required that the indictment on its face shall say in words that it is 'prosecuted in the name and by the authority' of the state. It merely directs that the state in its name and by its authority shall prosecute, and that no other name or any other authority shall control the prosecution. It is sufficient that the court shall recognize the state and its authority, and no other party or authority in such prosecutions, and that the proceedings are so conducted and the record show it."

[c] In State v. Russell, 2 La. Ann. 604, the court also said: "The expressions, which it is contended should be used in the indictment, occur in the constitutions of several states of the Union, and the point now presented has been so frequently decided in those states that it can scarcely be considered an open question. It has been repeatedly held to be a sufficient compliance with the constitutional requisition, that the prosecution should appear to be conducted in the name of the state, and that a formal averment that it was found by the authority of the state, was not essential to the validity of the indictment."

[d] Indictment Transferred From Territorial to State Court.—It is not necessary for such an indictment to show that it is prosecuted in the name and by the authority of the state. Reeves v. Territory, 2 Okla. Crim. 351, 101 Pac. 1039.

64. Brown v. State, 46 Tex. Crim.

572, 81 S. W. 718. And see Jefferson v. State, 24 Tex. App. 505, 7 S. W. 244; Saine v. State, 14 Tex. App. 141.

[a] An early Texas case is to be compared with the later ones, however. In that case, the court said: "No prescribed form of words is necessary in order that the prosecution be carried on in the name and by the authority of the republic of Texas." It is enough that the prosecution is conducted by the proper law officer, acting under the authority and conducting the prosecution in the name of the government." Drummond v. Republic, 2 Tex. 156.

[b] In an early Georgia case, it was held that an indictment should be "in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia," such being the form prescribed by statute; that if these words were omitted, on timely objection, it would be quashed; but such objection, being merely to form of indictment, should have been taken before trial, and could not be taken in arrest of judgment. Horne v. State, 37 Ga. 89, 90, 92 Am. Dec. 40.

65. Manovitch v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. 260, 96 S. W. 1.

66. Manovitch v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. 260, 96 S. W. 1; Dancy v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 615, 34 S. W. 114, 948.

67. Sufficient Showings.—While it would be seem appropriate to express an indictment to be "in the name and by the authority of the state," yet it is sufficient if it recites the name of the state, and then recites that it is presented "in behalf of said state." Wentworth v. State, 1 Iowa 167.

[a] That the article "the" is omitted, making the proceedings run in the name of "state of Texas," instead of "the state of Texas," is not fatal, (1) those terms being essentially the same. Harriman v. State, 2

c. *Effect of Defects or Omissions Therein.*⁶⁸ — In accordance with a rule applicable to indictments, mere clerical and grammatical errors in the beginning of the indictment do not vitiate it,⁶⁹ since defects or

Greene (Iowa) 270, 277. (2) So also, where the indictment commenced simply with the name of the state, instead of with "State of," naming it, it was nevertheless held a sufficient compliance with the constitutional requirement. State v. Anthony, 1 McCord L. (S. C.) 285.

[b] Nor does the omission altogether of the name of the state render the showing insufficient, where it sufficiently appears what state was intended. Thus, where the indictment commenced, "State of Missouri, county of Hickory. The grand jurors for the state of _____, empaneled, charged and sworn to inquire within and for the body of the county of Hickory aforesaid," it was held sufficient, as against the objection that it did not appear that the prosecution was carried on in the name of the state. State v. England, 19 Mo. 386.

[c] Use of common abbreviation for name of state sufficient in State v. Foster, 61 Mo. 549.

[d] An indictment entitled in the name of the state of venue as plaintiff against the person charged with a crime as defendant, reciting that it is found and presented to the court by a grand jury of the state in and for the proper county, duly and legally impaneled, charged, and sworn, and which concludes that the crime charged was committed against the peace and dignity of the state of venue, and is signed by the state's attorney of the proper county, sufficiently shows that the prosecution is carried on in the name and by the authority of the state. State v. Thompson, 4 S. D. 95, 55 N. W. 725, followed in State v. Kerr, 3 N. D. 523, 58 N. W. 27.

[e] An indictment commencing "state of Louisiana, Parish of, etc.," which recites that, "The grand jurors for the State of Louisiana, etc., acting in the name and by the authority of the state," etc., (1) is a sufficient compliance with the requirement that all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state (State v. Seaborne, 8 Rob. [La.] 518), (2) as is one commencing thus:

"In the name and by the authority of the State of Louisiana, the grand jurors . . . do," etc. State v. Valsin, 47 La. Ann. 115, 16 So. 768.

[f] Insufficient Showing.—In State v. Cutter, 65 Mo. 503, the indictment commenced: "The grand jurors of the county of Wayne, in the state of Missouri, being duly empaneled, . . . within and for the body of the county of Wayne, do, upon their oath present," etc. This was held insufficient, the court saying: "The constitution requires all prosecutions to be conducted in the name of the state of Missouri. If the words 'of the county of Wayne' be rejected, as it is contended they may be, as surplusage, the result will be that you will have left merely the words: 'The grand jurors . . . in the state of Missouri,' &c. This is altogether too loose."

[g] In Texas, (1) the statute provides that the indictment must commence, "In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas," and the omission of the word "by" therefrom renders the indictment fatally defective. Brown v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. 572, 81 S. W. 718. (2) But the addition of the word "of" after the word "name" in the formula does not change the meaning thereof, and is not fatal to the indictment. Moss v. State, 60 Tex. Crim. 268, 131 S. W. 1088. (3) Nor does the omission of the word "the" from before the word "authority" invalidate the indictment, since the constitutional provision does not prescribe its use, but only the statutory provision. Brown v. State (Tex. Crim.), 77 S. W. 12; Weaver v. State (Tex. Crim.), 76 S. W. 564. (4) It is not objectionable that this article "the" is inserted, since it does not add to, or in the least vary the sense and meaning of the constitutional requirement. Spencer v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. 580, 90 S. W. 638.

68. For treatment of similar subject in connection with caption, see supra, VIII, A, 3, d.

69. Where an indictment commenced thus: "The grand jurors within and the body of the county," the omissions therein can generally be corrected by amendment,⁷⁰ or are cured by recitals in the record,⁷¹ or by statutory provisions for the cure of defects in the indictment.⁷²

5. Charging Part.—The requisites of the charging part of the indictment are treated elsewhere in this article.¹ It is sufficient at this place to say that it need not repeat matter properly contained in the caption,² whether it be the style of the court in which the indictment is found,³ the place where,⁴ or authority by which it was held,⁵ the character of the judge who presided,⁶ the time when found by the grand jury,⁷ the names⁸ and number⁹ of the grand jury. It need not show the organization of the grand jury,¹⁰ or that the indictment was returned into court.¹¹

6. Conclusion.—a. *In General.*¹²—The "conclusion" of an indictment, although prescribed by the fundamental law, is nevertheless one of its formal parts or divisions.¹³ It indicates the power or author-omission of the word "for" after the word "and" did not vitiate it. State v. Brady, 14 Vt. 353.

70. See State v. Moore, 1 Ind. 548, omission of word "oath" from clause "upon their oath present," may be supplied by amendment.

As to amendments generally, see infra, XII.

71. Though more formal for the indictment to read "The grand jury for the state of Missouri, summoned from the body of the county of T., duly empaneled," etc., the omission to follow that form is not fatal, provided it sufficiently appears from the record that the indictment was preferred by a lawful grand jury in and to a court of competent jurisdiction. *State v. ity against which the facts charged constitute an offense.¹⁴ It is not essential to restate the time or place of the commission of the offense in the conclusion.¹⁵

b. Against Peace and Dignity.—(I.) Necessity for.—One special feature in every indictment recognized at common law, except those for mere non-feasance, was that it should conclude with words indicating that the acts committed were an offense against the peace and dignity of the sovereign power in whose name the accusation proceeded.¹⁶ There were various terminations, depending on the time and character of the crime charged.¹⁷ The usual words were, “against the peace of our Lord the King (or Lady the Queen), his crown and dignity.”¹⁸

In this country the words are simply changed to conform to the proper designation of the sovereign power, and are generally such words as are designated by the constitution or statute law of the par-

Pa.—Com. v. Paxton, 14 Phila. 665, 36 Leg. Int. 444.

[a] In Starling v. State, 90 Miss. 255, 43 So. 952, 13 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 776, the court said: “It may be proper to remark that whether those words ‘against the peace and dignity of the state,’ constitute matter of form or matter of substance, as those terms are used in the technical law of criminal pleading, depends solely on the idea inherently set forth by those words, or, to put it differently, on the essential nature of the thing embraced by those words, and not upon the mere fact that the constitution required them to be used. If those words are of the substance of an indictment, they are so for the same reason that any other words are of the substance of an indictment, because they are essential to the definition of the offense intended to be charged—not because they are required by the constitution to be used in the conclusion of the indictment. For example, if the constitution had done so foolish a thing as to say that an indictment should conclude with a picture of a drawn sword, since the constitution is the organic law of the land, an indictment without that picture would certainly be void; and yet is any logical mind required to admit that the picture of a drawn sword, though required by the constitution, is matter of substance in any indictment? The constitution may arbitrarily make anything it pleases essential to the conclusion of an indictment; but whether the thing required to be in the conclusion of an indictment is matter of substance or matter of form depends on the essential nature of that thing, and not on the arbitrary requirement that it shall be contained in the preface, or in the conclusion of an indictment.”

St., 1852, p. 368, providing that indictment shall not be deemed invalid by reason of its omission); Com. v. Frelove, 150 Mass. 66, 22 N. E. 435 (statute [Pub. St., ch. 213, §16] expressly enacting that no indictment shall be quashed on this ground, if the omission does not tend to prejudice the defendant, not unconstitutional).

[a] Under a statute providing that (1) "No indictment shall be quashed, or judgment be arrested, or new trial be granted, on account of any defect in the form of the indictment . . ., or for any cause whatsoever, unless the court shall be of the opinion that the indictment is so vague, indistinct and indefinite as to mislead the accused and embarrass him in the preparation of his defense or expose him after conviction or acquittal to substantial danger of a new prosecution for the same offense," it has been held that the rule of the common law is abolished, and it is now no longer material that the indictment omits the formal conclusion. Shiver v. State, 41 Fla. 630, 27 So. 36. (2) See also Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 168, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. ed. 657, holding that the omission to so conclude is of a matter of form, which does not tend to the prejudice of the defendant, and is, therefore, to be disregarded, within the rule of §1025, Rev. St., providing that an indictment shall not be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant on the merits.

[b] In North Carolina it is not now essential that an indictment shall conclude "against the peace and dignity of the state," the early rule requiring such averment not being sanctioned either by the constitution or statutes of the state. State v. Craft (N. C.), 83 S. E. 772; State v. Peters, 107 N. C. 876, 12 S. E. 74; State v. Kirkman, 104 N. C. 911, 10 S. E. 312, overruling State v. Joyner, 81 N. C. 534, in so far as it is in conflict upon this point.

[c] Especially is this so since the statute, now Rev. §3254, which makes the bill "sufficient in form, for all intents and purposes, if it express the charge against the defendant in a plain, intelligible, and explicit" manner, and, if that is done, forbids that the bill should either be "quashed or judgment arrested by reason of any informality or refinement." State v. Craft (N. C.), 83 S. E. 772; State v. Kirkman, 104 N. C. 911, 10 S. E. 312.

[d] In State v. Parker, 81 N. C. 531, the court held sufficient an indictment concluding "against the peace and dignity," omitting the words "of the state," though it would seem that the omitted words were precisely the material ones required by the constitutional provision of 1776.

[a] "So punctilious were the courts" at the common law, "that if it appeared on the face of the indictment that the offence charged was committed in a previous reign it was necessary to conclude the indictment accordingly. In 1766, on a writ of error to the King's Bench, the lords took the opinion of the judges, which unanimously was that the concluding an indictment against the peace of the ~~now~~ king, when the offence was charged to have been committed in the time of the ~~late~~ king, was fatal and rendered the indictment insufficient. . . . Rex v. Lookup, 3 Burr. 1901." State v. Minford, 64 N. J. L. 518, 45 Atl. 817.

[b] "By the ancient law, in all peculiar jurisdictions, offenses were said to be done against his peace in whose court they were tried; in a county palatine, contra pacem domini; in a sheriff's court, contra pacem vice-comitis; in the court of a corporation, contra pacem ballivorum; and, as in the Court of King's Bench, the supreme court of common law in the Kingdom of England, they are said to be done contra pacem Regis—'against the peace of the King'—so, in this republic, they must by law be alleged, in the conclusion of the indictment, of course, to be done 'against the peace and dignity of the State.'" State v. Reakey, 1 Mo. App. 3.

[c] In Alaska, an indictment properly concludes "against the peace and dignity of the United States." Jackson v. United States, 102 Fed. 473, 42 C. C. A. 452.

[d] Where a state statute makes counterfeiting an offense, an indictment for a violation of such law prop-

An indictment concluding contra pacem charges only a violation of the common law.³²

(II.) Sufficiency of.—An indictment concludes properly, if it follows the form prescribed by the statute or constitutional provision.³³

An examination of the authorities indicates some difference in the degree of exactness required, in following the constitutional or statutory language, however;³⁴ but they are all practically uniform that there must be a substantial, if not an exact, compliance with such constitutional or statutory requirements.³⁵ erly concludes against the sovereignty of the state, and not against the sovereignty of the United States. If it were an indictment for a violation of the federal statute, it would then conclude against the sovereignty of the United States; but in that event, the prosecution could not properly be sustained in the state court. Harlan v. People, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 207, 216.

[e] Indictment Transferred From Territorial Court.—It is not necessary for an indictment transferred from a territorial court to a state court, upon a change from a territory to statehood, to conclude "against the peace and dignity of the state." Reeves v. Ter., 2 Okla. Crim. 351, 101 Pac. 1039.

[f] But an indictment found after the adoption of a state constitution for an offense committed before the adoption of that instrument and while the jurisdiction comprised only a territory is nevertheless properly concluded "against the peace and dignity of the people of the state." Packer v. People, 8 Colo. 361, 8 Pac. 564; Wishard v. State, 5 Okla. Crim. 610, 115 Pac. 796; Baker v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 265, 105 Pac. 379; Faggard v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 159, 104 Pac. 930.

[a] Name of State in Conclusion. An indictment commencing with the words "the state of," naming the state, and concluding "against the peace and dignity of the same" is sufficient, under a constitutional requirement that it conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same." State v. Johnson, Walk. (Miss.) 392.

[b] So too, an allegation that the offense was committed "against the peace and dignity of the state," without mentioning the name of the state is sufficient, where the state is mentioned in the caption, and the constitution or statute does not require the name of the state to be stated in the conclusion. Atwell v. State, 63 Ala. 61; Com. v. Young, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 1.

Rep. 293. Wis.—Williams v. State, 27 Wis. 402.

[a] In State v. Waters, 1 Mo. App. 7, it is announced that the general doctrine is that if the intent of the constitution be substantially responded to in this part of the indictment, a literal transcript of the formula is not essential.

[b] A conclusion "against the peace and dignity of the ———" was fatal under a constitutional provision requiring that all prosecutions shall conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same," i. e. of the state. State v. Nunn, 29 La. Ann. 589.

[c] An indictment concluding "against the peace of the statute and the statute in such case made and provided" does not comply with the constitutional requirement. State v. Lopez, 19 Mo. 254.

[d] In Cox v. State, 8 Tex. App. 254, 34 Am. Rep. 746, the indictment concluded "against the peace and dignity of the statute." This was held sufficient grounds for holding the indictment invalid.

[e] Omission Contra Dignitatem.

Changes in the phraseology of the conclusion prescribed which do not change the sense thereof do not invalidate the indictment.⁶⁶

Where all the words required by the constitutional or statutory provision are contained in the conclusion, additional words contained therein are mere surplusage, not invalidating the indictment.⁶⁷

The words "against the peace of the state," naming it, are insufficient where the constitution requires a conclusion "against the peace and dignity of the state." Williams v. State, 27 Wis. 402. And see Cain v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 512.

[f] Omission of Word.—Where the indictment concluded "against the peace and dignity of the People of the State of Illinois;" where the constitution provided for a conclusion "against the peace and dignity of the same people, etc.," the mission of the word "same" did not vitiate it. Kirkham v. People, 170 Ill. 9, 48 N. E. 465; Zarresseller v. People, 17 Ill. 101.

[g] The omission of the article (1) "the" before "state" is fatally defective. State v. Warner, 220 Mo. 23, 119 S. W. 399; State v. Campbell, 210 Mo. 202, 109 S. W. 706, 14 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 403; Thompson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 168, following Thompson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 39. (2) Its omission changes not only the sense but the very substance of the clause. State v. Campbell, 210 Mo. 202, 224, 109 S. W. 706, 14 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 403.

[h] Misspelling of Word "Against."—Where the letters "ag" in the word "against" were entirely omitted, making the word "ainst" instead of "against," the omission was fatal to the indictment. Bird v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. 408, 35 S. W. 382. But where the letters "i" and "n" were transposed, so as to make the word spell "aganist" instead of "against," the indictment was not fatally defective. Hudson v. State, 10 Tex. App. 215, 227, holding case of Cox v. State, 8 Tex. App. 254, in which the word "statute" was substituted for "state" not analogous.

[a] Illustrations.—The fact that an indictment concludes "against the peace and dignity of the state," either naming or omitting to name the state, instead of "against the peace and dignity of the same," as required by the constitutional or statutory provision is not fatal to it. Ala.—Washington v. State, 53 Ala. 29. La.—State v. Johnson, 35 La. Ann. 842. Pa.—Rogers v. Com., 5 Serg. & R. 463; Com. v. Paxton, 14 Phila. 605, 33 Leg. Int. 444. S. C.—*State v. (the prosecutor) against the peace of the state, the government and dignity of the same" instead of "against the peace and dignity of the same" defective.

[b] "Our Said State."—In one of the leading cases, State v. Kean, 10 N. H. 347, 34 Am. Dec. 162, the language used in the conclusion was "against the peace and dignity of our said state," instead of "the state" as required by the constitution. It was held by the court that the use of the language was not such a departure from the language required by the constitution as to vitiate the indictment.

37. Ark.—Anderson v. State, 5 Ark. 444, interpolation upon the form of the words "people of the" will not vitiate indictment. Md.—Richardson v. State, 66 Md. 295, 7 Atl. 43. Minn.—*State v. The words "contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof," appearing at the conclusion of an indictment, though apparently in their grammatical connection referring to a preceding statement therein not relating to the commission of the act constituting the offense charged, will be held to apply to that act.³⁸

c. Against Statute. — (I.) Necessity and Object. — The conclusion "contrary to the form of the statute" is now dispensed with in many jurisdictions, under statutes expressly providing that its omission shall not invalidate the indictment,³⁹ or that the indictment shall not be deemed insufficient by reason of any defect which does not tend

[a] Where there is a mere redundancy of words in the conclusion of an indictment, an excess in form shall be made subsidiary to the ends of justice. Anderson v. State, 5 Ark. 444, 451.

[b] Illustrations. — An indictment, under a constitutional requirement that it conclude "against the peace and dignity of the state," is not invalidated by the addition of the words "same," and "aforesaid" in describing the state. State v. Powers, 59 S. C. 200, 37 S. E. 690; State v. Mason, 54 S. C. 240, 32 S. E. 357; State v. Robinson, 27 S. C. 615, 4 S. E. 570; State v. Washington, 1 Bay (S. C.) 120, 1 Am. Dec. 601.

[c] Nor is an indictment rendered fatally defective (1) because it adds the name of the state to the conclusion (Mo.—State v. Hays, 78 Mo. 600. Tex. State v. Pratt, 44 Tex. 93. Va.—Brown v. Com., 86 Va. 466, 10 S. E. 745. W. Va. State v. Allen, 8 W. Waters*, 1 Mo. App. 7; State v. Reakey, 1 Mo. App. 3.

[d] Putting the date when and the place where found, at the end of an indictment, after the concluding phrase thereof, does not vitiate it; such date and place are no part of the indictment. State v. Johnson, 37 Minn. 493, 35 N. W. 373.

[e] But see Haun v. State, 13 Tex. App. 383, 44 Am. Rep. 706, holding that an indictment concluding "against the peace and dignity of the state, this the 14th day of November, 1882" was bad, such conclusion being in violation of the constitutional provision.

[f] Second Count.—Where a second count of an indictment concludes "against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio, being a further description of the same transaction complained of in the first count of this indictment," the additional words following the prescribed conclusion may be treated as surplusage, and will not invalidate this count of the indictment. State v. Stapely, 19 Ohio Dec. (N. P.) 110.

38. Jones v. State, 115 Ga. 814, 42 S. E. 271.

[a] Though an indictment in setting out the offense of false pretenses denies the truth of each pretense charged to have been made and immediately following the last pretense so negatived, separated only by a semicolon, concludes with the formal language, "against the peace and dignity of the state," it is not open to the objection that the concluding clause is limited to the one averment immediately preceding it, instead of referring to and modifying the entire charge. *State v. to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant on the merits.⁴⁰ In the absence of such statutes, however, if a statute creates the offense, the indictment should, in addition to the conclusion, "contra pacem."⁴¹ also contain the conclusion contrary to the form of the statute,⁴² though upon this proposition there are some authorities to the contrary.⁴³ subject is revised by statute,⁴⁶ the indictment should so conclude.

But if the statute is only declaratory of what was previously an offense at common law, without adding to, or altering the punishment,⁴⁷ or merely regulates the jurisdiction in which a common-law offense may be prosecuted,⁴⁸ or merely deprives the accused of some benefit to which he was at common law entitled,⁴⁹ or merely alters a rule of evidence,⁵⁰ there is no necessity for the indictment to so conclude. And where a statute merely alters the punishment of a common-law offense, the statutory punishment may be inflicted, although the indictment does not conclude contra formam statuti.⁵¹

Surplusage.—Where the indictment charges an offense indictable at common law, and there is no statute in addition making it punishable, the concluding words of the indictment “contrary to the form of the statute,” are to be rejected as surplusage, and do not vitiate the indictment.⁵²

Object of Conclusion. — This conclusion to an indictment designates it as a prosecution under a statute and not at the common law.⁵⁴ It is not its office to supply averments of fact in the indictment.⁵¹

(II.) Sufficiency of. — Though the technical words, "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided" are constantly used in all indictments, which consult accuracy and precision,⁵⁵ yet equivalent expressions are just as sufficient in point of law.⁵⁶ All that is required is, that some phrase should be used, which shows that the offense charged is founded on some statute.⁵⁷ It is not necessary that the indictment should specify the particular statute upon which it is founded, however,⁵⁸ unless it be a private statute, whereof the court

[a] Equivalent Expressions. — (1) The following expressions have been held sufficient: "Contrary to the statute" (State v. Toadvine, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 16), (2) "contrary to law" (Hudson v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 317; Fuller v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 63). (3) And see Camp v. State, 25 Ga. 689, [b] Contrary to Form of "Statue." (1) That the offense is alleged to be contrary to the form of the "statue" instead of contrary to the form of the "statute" is not objectionable (State v. Smith, 63 N. C. 234; State v. Newton, 42 Vt. 537), (2) especially under a statute providing that an entire omission of the words shall not vitiate the indictment. State v. Dorr, 82 Me. 341, 19 Atl. 861.

cannot take notice, in which event the statute must be named.⁵⁹

A statute of the state of venue must be intended by the conclusion "contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided."⁶⁰ A conclusion against the statute of another jurisdiction renders the indictment bad.⁶¹

(III.) In Plural or Singular.—By express provision of statute in some jurisdictions, an indictment is not bad on account of the insertion of the words "contrary to the form of the statute," instead of the words "against the form of the statutes," or vice versa.⁶² Even in the absence of statute, by the weight of authority though an offense is prohibited by several independent statutes, a conclusion in the singular is sufficient;⁶³ but as indicated, upon this proposition there

[a] An indictment for an offense committed in a territory returned after it became a state concluding "contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided" means against the statute in force at the time the offense was committed, and continued in force by the enabling act and the constitution of the state. Wishard v. State, 5 Okla. Crim. 610, 115 Pac. 796.

61. Where an indictment in South Carolina, since the revolution, concluded against "a British act of Parliament made of force in this state," the indictment was held to be bad, although there was an act of assembly against the offense committed, which was an exact transcript of the English statute. State v. Holly, 2 Bay 262.

[a] But where an indictment concluded "contrary to the act of assembly of the state of South Carolina," whereas the act under which the indictment was prosecuted was an act of the Province of South Carolina, it was decided that the indictment was nevertheless good. *State v. [a] "The defect has been cured in England by the statute. 7 Geo. 4, ch. 64, sec. 20." State v. Abernathy, 44 N. C. 428.

[b] Under a statute providing that "no indictment shall be quashed, . . . on account of any defect in the form of the indictment, or of any misjoinder of offenses, or for any cause whatsoever," etc., it is immaterial that the indictment concludes against the form of the "statutes" where it should properly conclude against the form of the "statute." Michael v. State, 40 Fla. 265, 23 So. 944, under §2893, Rev. St., 1892.

[c] "Formerly, it was necessary to set out at length the statute, or statutes, if more than one, upon which an indictment was founded, in order that the party might be informed of the law, against which it was alleged that he had offended. This particularity being attended with much inconvenience, and rendering the proceedings very cumbersome, the conclusion 'contra formam statuti' or 'contra formam statutorum' if the indictment was founded upon more than one statute, was received as a sufficient compliance with the law, instead of the long recital. But as many prosecutions still failed, because of the conclusion, 'contra formam statuti,' when it should have been 'statutorum,' and vice versa, the courts permitted the device of concluding 'contra formam statuti,' and would construe the abbreviation to be statuti or statutorum, in order to fit the case." State v. Smith, 63 N. C. 234.

A conclusion in the plural is sometimes necessary where one statute is in relation to another, as where one creates the offense and another fixes the penalty.⁶⁵ But where the statute creating the offense is only amended or regulated, or altered in parts thereof which do not relate clusion in plural not necessary. R. I. State v. Wilbor, 1 R. I. 199, 36 Am. Dec. 245.

[a] A conclusion against the form of the statute, in the singular, is sufficient in all cases, where the offense is distinctly within more than one independent statute. United States v. Gilbert, 2 Sumn. 19, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15, 204.

64. Ind.—Francisco v. State, 1 Ind. 179; State v. Hunter, 8 Blackf. 212; Tevis v. State, 8 Blackf. 303. N. C. State v. Sandy, 25 N. C. 570; State v. Pool, 13 N. C. 202; State v. Jim, 7 N. C. 3. But now in this state, the rule has been changed by statute. Eng. Rex v. Cox, 2 Bulstr. 258, 80 Eng. Reprint 1105.

[a] The reason was, "that the party has a right to know the law against which, it is alleged, he has offended. Hence if the indictment be given by statute, it must conclude against the statute, otherwise it is at common law; and if the party be not punishable by that law, there can be no judgment against him. So, with reference to offences depending on more than one statute, the indictment must be varied in the conclusion, to suit the truth. For anciently, the pleadings recited the statute or statutes, and, of course, the necessity which caused the recital of the one, when there was but one, would likewise require the recital of all, when there was more than one. Afterwards, the general conclusion, contra formam, etc., was received instead of the recital. But it is manifest, that the reference to the statute or statutes in the general conclusion ought to correspond to the recital or recitals, for which it was substituted. Hence, as has been already stated, it is clear law, that a conclusion, contra formam statuti, is bad, when there are two or more statutes, and the conclusion ought to be contra formam statutorum." State v. Sandy, 25 N. C. 570.

[b] Where but one statute created, defined and punished the offense, though another related to the form of prosecuting it, an indictment concluding in the singular was nevertheless sufficient. State v. Hoyle, 28 N. C. 1, with which should be compared State v. Pool, 13 N. C. 202, holding that where one statute creates an offense, imposes a penalty and gives an action to recover it, and another makes the offense indictable, the indictment for the offense should conclude "against the form of the statutes."

[c] Where the offense and the penalty are declared by the same statute, though by different sections, the indictment being founded on this statute, there is no necessity that it should conclude in the plural. Crawford v. State, 2 Ind. 132.

[d] So also, where the offense was described by two chapters, which were but parts of one statute, a conclusion in the singular was sufficient. State v. Bell, 25 N. C. 506.

65. Ind.—King v. State, 2 Ind. 523; State v. Moses, 7 Blackf. 244. Md. State v. Cassel, 2 Har. & G. 407. N. Y. Kane v. People, 8 Wend. 203, 212.

[a] And see 2 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 173, where he says, if one statute be relative to another, as where the former makes the offence, and the latter adds a penalty, the indictment ought to conclude contra formam statutorum, and in support of which principle he refers to Dingley v. Moor, Cro. Eliz., 750, 78 Eng. Reprint 982. To the same effect, see 3 Bacon's Abr., tit. Indictment, 571; Archb., Cr. Pl., p. 28.

[b] But where one statute creates an offense and inflicts the penalty, and a subsequent statute imposes another and further penalty, the indictment may well conclude contra formam statuti—in the singular. Butman's Case, 5 Me. 113; State v. Robbins, 1 Stoolb. (S. C.) 355. And see Bennett v. State, 3 Ind. 167; Strong v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 192 (both holding that though the punishment is altered by a subsequent statute, a conclusion in the singular is correct). See also Rex v. Pim, Russ. & R. (Eng.) 425, holding that if one statute subjects an act to a pe-

to the offense or to the punishment thereof, a conclusion in the singular is proper.⁶⁶ If a statute is made perpetual by a second statute, a conclusion in the singular will be sufficient.⁶⁷

An indictment on a single statute concluding in the plural is good, even in the absence of a statute,⁶⁸ though upon this proposition there are also decisions to the contrary.⁶⁹

d. Special Conclusions.—In addition to the usual conclusion “contra pacem”⁷⁰ and “contra formam,”⁷¹ special conclusions are sometimes required to indictments charging certain offenses, such as murder,⁷² nuisances,⁷³ perjury,⁷⁴ and treason.⁷⁵ The indictment need no longer conclude “to the great damage of the party” particularly injured by the offense, “to the evil example of all others,” nor “to the great displeasure of Almighty God.”⁷⁶

e. To Each Count or Charge.—While under some statutes, and probably by the weight of authority, it is not necessary that each count of an indictment should conclude with the formal conclusion,⁷⁷

cuniary penalty, and a subsequent statute makes it a felony, an indictment for the felony, concluding against the form of the statute is sufficient. Compare Reg. v. Adams, 1 C. & M. 299, 41 E. C. L. 167, holding that where a statute declares an offense and awards a punishment, and by a subsequent statute the punishment is altered, the indictment for such offense should conclude in the plural.

[a] The same is true if one statute adopt and continue the provisions of another. Rex v. Morgan, 2 Str. 1066, 93 Eng. Reprint 1036. And see King v. State, 2 Ind. 523.

[b] Where the crime prohibited by one statute is greater in degree and includes the crime punished by another statute, the conclusion of an indictment therefor must be against the statute in the singular, and not against the statutes in the plural, since if the accused is guilty of the greater crime, the statute punishing it embraces the whole offense and merges the violation of the other, while if he did not commit the greater offense he violated only the statute against the lesser. [a] Where a statute defines an offense, makes it indictable and prescribes the punishment, an indictment for it is wholly founded on this statute, although it contains a reference to a former statute, giving a penalty for the same act, and should conclude in the singular. [a] So concluding, the formula is held to apply to each count of the bill. La.—State v. Thompson, 51 La. Ann. 1089, 25 So. 954. Miss.—Starling v. State, 90 Miss. 255, 43 So. 952, 13 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 776. Ohio.—Olenendorf v. State, 64 Ohio St. 118, 59 N. E. 892.

[b] Reason.—In the leading case of Starling v. State, 90 Miss. 255, 266, 43 So. 952, 13 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 776, the court, through Whitfield, C. J., says: "We are clearly of the opinion that the words 'against the peace and dignity of the state of Mississippi' are only required to appear, in the language of the constitution, at the conclusion of the indictment. It is not necessary that they should be repeated after each count. The language of the constitution is: 'All indictments shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state.' No single count in an indictment containing more than one is the indictment. The indictment is the thing which contains all the counts. There may be many counts, but there can be but one indictment. The bill of indictment, in the language of the law, is a unit, is one complete thing, and it is this bill of indictment to which the constitution has reference in section 169. The bill of indictment in this case did conclude, as the constitution requires with the words 'against the that each count must contain the requisite conclusion.⁷⁹ It is not necessary to make a separate conclusion to each charge in a single count in an indictment.⁸⁰

7. Signatures.⁸¹ — a. Foreman of the Grand Jury. — (I.) Necessity for. — It has been the rule from time immemorial that an indictment found by the grand jury has been signed by the foreman,⁸² and it is a good and safe rule.⁸³ But it was not required at common law that either the foreman or any of the members of the grand jury should sign their finding.⁸⁴ Nor is it now necessary that the foreman sign peace and dignity of the state.' Those words, whenever they appear at the conclusion of an indictment, necessarily apply to every count in the indictment going before its conclusion, and it would be the merest tautology to repeat them at the end of each count. All that is meant, when it is said that each count must be complete in itself, is that each count must completely and accurately define the offense, giving all its essential constituent elements, embraced in that count; and, whenever a count in an indictment, does that, it has perfectly fulfilled its office. The words in this indictment, 'against the peace and dignity of the state,' do not belong to either count, technically considered. They belong to the conclusion of the whole indictment, as the constitution requires."

[a] In Texas, the general form of indictment prescribed by statute provides for the signature of the foreman of the grand jury at the end thereof. Penal Code, art. 458.

As to indorsement, see infra, VIII, A, 8, c.

[b] It is thus made the duty (1) of the foreman of the grand jury to sign the indorsement required, although he may not have approved the indictment. State v. Lightfoot, 107 Iowa 344, 78 N. W. 41 (2) This is true by express provision of the statute in one state. Minn. Rev. Laws, 1905, §5295.

[c] Even though the foreman is disqualified from participating in the proceedings of the grand jury, it is not objectionable that he signs the indorsement. State v. Lightfoot, 107 Iowa 344, 78 N. W. 41.

[d] Presumptions.—(1) A reviewing court will presume that the person, whose name appears on the indictment as foreman, was the duly appointed foreman (Deitz v. State, 123 Ind. 85, 23 N. E. 1086; State v. Vaughn, 132 Mo. App. 135, 112 S. W. 728). (2) though the appointment is not shown by the record (State v. Vaughn, 132 Mo. App. 135, 112 S. W. 728); (3) and that the recital in the transcript that another person was appointed foreman was a mistake of the clerk (Deitz v. State, 123 Ind. 85, 23 N. E. 1086), (4) or that the first foreman was discharged, and the person named in the record appointed in his place. Mohler v. People, 24 Ill. 26. See also Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 362, 49 S. E. 317. (5) Also that the judge whose duty it was to inspect the indictment knew who the foreman of the grand jury was at the time the indictment was returned. Deitz v. State, 123 Ind. 85, 23 N. E. 1086.

[e] Where the foreman is directed not to participate in the proceedings of the grand jury, "it must be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that he obeyed the direction of the court; and the fact that he performed a statutory duty in signing the indorsement, after the investigation had been completed and the action to be taken determined, does not overcome that presumption." State v. Lightfoot, 107 Iowa 344, 78 N. W. 41.

of his failure so to sign, that the same may be set aside.⁷ But, as indicated, in some states, the signature is a requirement prescribed by statute,⁸ and without which the indictment is a nullity.⁹

The omission of the signature even if necessary to the indictment is a formal defect, patent on its face, to be taken advantage of by demurrer or motion to quash before the jury are sworn.¹⁰ If it is not necessary that the indictment should be so signed, of course a useless signature does not vitiate it.¹¹

[a] Compare Hamilton v. State, 103 Ind. 96, 2 N. E. 299, wherein the court said: "Whether the failure of the prosecuting attorney to sign an indictment would constitute such a defect or imperfection as would tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits of the cause (R. S. 1881, section 1756) seems never to have been at any time fully considered by this court, and may hence be regarded as still an open question in this state." Dukes v. State, 11 Ind. 557, 71 Am. Dec. 370, wherein the court said: "Indictments are found and returned by the grand jury. The prosecuting attorney acts as their adviser, and may as their scribe; and it is proper that he should sign indictments. The law makes it his duty to do so. But we do not think his signature essential to the validity of the indictment. His failure to sign it would not vitiate an indictment duly returned and authenticated by the grand jury."

[a] Waiver.—Though such omission constitutes a defect, objection thereto is waived by pleading the general issue, without first moving to quash. Riflemaker v. State, 25 Ohio St. 395.

[b] After Verdict.—(1) The objection comes too late after verdict. Cross v. People, 66 Ill. App. 170. (2) Even though required, and omitted, the omission is not sufficient to authorize the setting aside of the judgment, it being cured by a statute providing that no indictment shall be deemed invalid by reason of any defect or imperfection which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits. Harris*, 12 Nev. 414, holding that even if the district attorney has no authority to appoint one his deputy with full powers, he could authorize him to draw up an indictment and sign his name to it, which was done in this case. S. C.—See State v. Coleman, 8 S. C. 237.

[a] Pennsylvania. — In Com. v. Brown, 23 Pa. Super. 470, 498, the signature of the district attorney was affixed to the indictment by his express direction, but he, in person laid the bill thus signed before the grand jury, and by other unequivocal acts avowed his individual and official responsibility therefor. The court said: "In view of these facts we are unable to conclude that the court erred in refusing to quash because the signature was not written with his own hand. At the same time we are not to be understood as commending the practice, much less as holding that the duty of signing bills of indictment, imposed upon district attorneys by the Act of May 3, 1850, P. L. 654, may be effectually performed by a clerk, or even a deputy, under a general authorization by the district attorney to sign his name. We overrule the assignment upon the special facts above set forth."

[b] Under the Tennessee code, an assistant to the district attorney cannot sign an indictment except in the presence and by the consent or direction of his principal, a general delegation of the functions of the office not being allowed under the constitution. State v. Amos, 101 Tenn. 350, 47 S. W. 410.

[c] While the better practice would be for a deputy to sign the name of his principal, the fact that a deputy signs his own name as deputy prosecuting attorney does not render it fatally defective. Taylor v. State, 113 Ind. 471, 16 N. E. 183; Knight v. State, 84 Ind. 73.

[d] Where the indictment is verified by the signature of a deputy prosecuting attorney, it will be presumed upon appeal that some sufficient reason appeared to the court into which the indictment was returned for the absence of the name of the prosecuting attorney. Taylor v. State, 113 Ind. 471, 16 N. E. 183. But see State v. Amos, 101 Tenn. 350, 47 S. W. 410.

[e] If it were essential that a presentment be signed, it would be sufficient if the person signing it did so, either by special authority to sign in particular cases, or by a general authority to sign in all cases where the official signature was required. Newman v. State, 101 Ga. 534, 28 S. E. 1005.

See also Temple v. State, 127 Tenn. 429, 155 S. W. 388.

[a] Presumptions. — In Isham v. State, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 111, the court said: "It must be presumed that the court would not permit any one to enter upon and discharge the important functions of this officer without the existence of some necessity and a regular appointment."

[b] Where an indictment is signed by one as "district-attorney pro tem," and the court below recognizes the official authority of such person, the Authority of Attorney-General.—Where a statute authorizes the governor to require the attorney-general to appear and prosecute criminal proceedings in any county, and he is so required, he becomes prosecuting attorney of that county, and as such may sign indictments presented by the grand jury.¹⁴

If it is signed by one without authority the signature is mere surplusage and cannot vitiate it where no signature is necessary.¹⁵

(II.) Form and Sufficiency.¹⁶—It is not necessary that the signature of the officer should be placed at the end of the indictment;¹⁷ but it must be on it, and must show that it is intended to cover all the counts contained therein.¹⁸

A signing by the surname in full and the Christian name by its initial is a good signature of a prosecuting attorney.¹⁹ That the supreme court will presume, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that such person was duly appointed so to act. Pierce v. State, 12 Tex. 210; Eppes v. State, 10 Tex. 474.

14. State v. Bowles, 70 Kan. 821, 79 Pac. 726, 69 L. R. A. 176 (followed in State v. Campbell, 70 Kan. 899, 79 Pac. 1133); State v. Young, 70 Kan. 900, 79 Pac. 1133.

[a] The district court of any county is obliged to take judicial notice of an executive order upon the attorney-general to appear and prosecute criminal proceedings there, and such authority need not be expressed on the face of an indictment which he signs. State v. Bowles, 70 Kan. 821, 79 Pac. 726, 69 L. R. A. 176.

[b] An assistant attorney-general similarly appointed has authority to sign an indictment, and such signature will be as effective as that of the county attorney. State v. Crilly, 69 Kan. 802, 77 Pac. 701, followed in State v. Callawaert, 69 Kan. 876, 77 Pac. 1135.

15. Brigman v. State, 8 Ala. App. 400, 62 So. 980; State v. Mace, 86 N. C. 668. And see People v. Lyman, 2 Utah 30.

[a] The fact that an indictment is signed by the defendant (1) as special solicitor does not render it subject to be stricken or quashed (Brigman v. State, 8 Ala. App. 400, 62 So. 980). (2) The mere presence of the defendant's name to the indictment cannot import anything more than that he, or some other person, wrote it there, and does not give use to a presumption that he, and not the person whose appointment is shown by the record, acted as special solicitor in the proceedings of the grand jury, which resulted in the finding of the indictment. Brigman v. State, 8 Ala. App. 400, 62 So. 980.

[b] Name of Former Prosecuting Officer.—The signing or printing by mistake of the name of a person to it as prosecuting officer who is not such officer does not invalidate it, where the statute does not require such officer's signature. Brown v. Com., 135 Ky. 635, 117 S. W. 281, 135 Am. St. Rep. 471, 21 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 672.

16. For treatment of this same subject in connection with signature of foreman, see supra, VIII, A, 7, a, (II); of signature of prosecuting attorney to information, see infra, VIII, B, 7, d.

17. State v. Lockett, 3 Heisk. 274.

[a] It is sufficient if it appear on some part of the paper, provided it appear beyond doubt that the attestation relates to the indictment and every part thereof, and identifies the same as the act and accusation of the government, done through its sworn officer. The object of the signature is to give dignity and verity to the paper, as a public act, having the sanction of the government. State v. Lockett, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 274.

18. State v. Lockett, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 274.

[a] Signature to Indorsement Not Sufficient.—The official signature of the district attorney to an indorsement on an indictment directing what witnesses shall be summoned, does not cure the want of a signature to the indictment itself. State v. Lockett, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 274.

19. Vanderkarr v. State, 51 Ind. 91.

name of the prosecuting officer is printed or typewritten on the indictment, instead of being signed in pen and ink, does not render it insufficient.²⁰ The fact that such signature is preceded by the word "attest" works no detriment, the word being mere surplusage.²¹

Name of Office.—The signature of the prosecuting officer is sufficient without the name of his county or district appended thereto,²² and without his official title being attached to the signature.²³ Nor is an indictment rendered invalid by reason of a wrong statement as to the county or district,²⁴ or as to the title of the officer who signs it.²⁵

8. Indorsements.—a. *In General.*²⁶—The indorsements on the bill form no part of the indictment.²⁷

[a] When the name of the prosecuting attorney is found appended to an indictment, the presumption is that it was so appended by his authority. Hamilton v. State, 103 Ind. 96, 2 N. E. 299, 53 Am. Rep. 491.

county." Tenn.—Currey v. State, 7 Baxt. 154.

S. was in fact, at the time of filing the indictment, county attorney of Jefferson county. State v. Tannahill, 4 Kan. 99.

b. Nature of Offense.—The nature of the offense charged in the indictment need not be indorsed upon it.²⁸ If, however, such indorsement is made²⁹ it will be regarded as surplusage;³⁰ and if, therefore, it is incorrect or even inconsistent with the indictment, it will not vitiate it, the court not being bound by it.³¹

Title of Case.—The statutes do not require that the title of the case shall be indorsed in full, or otherwise, on the indictment.³²

[b] "But this grew out of the practice which there obtained. The bills of indictment or formal accusa-

ment still prevails in some of the states having no statutes upon the subject,³⁴ the doctrine best sustained by reason and authority, in the absence of a mandatory statute, is that the indorsement may be dispensed with altogether, if the fact of the jury's finding appears in any other form in the record.³⁵ But it has been the universal practice as a matter of identification of the indictment,³⁶ and even though not required by statute, such indorsement should be made.³⁷ In the tions of crime were prepared and presented to the grand jury who, after investigation, either approved or disapproved of the accusation, and indicated their action by the indorsement, 'a true bill' or 'ignoramus,' or sometimes, in lieu of the latter, 'not found,' and all the bills thus acted upon were returned by the grand jury to the court. In this way the indorsement became the evidence, if not the only evidence, to the court of their action." Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. ed. 657.

[a] In this country the common practice is for the grand jury to investigate any alleged crime, no matter how or by whom suggested to them, and after determining that the evidence is sufficient to justify putting the party suspected on trial, to direct the preparation of the formal charge or indictment. Thus they return into court only those accusations which they have approved, and the fact that they thus return them into court is evidence of such approval, and the formal indorsement loses its essential character. Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. ed. 657.

[b] The only end that such indorsement could serve would be for the purpose of identification. The presentation in open court, the indorsement of the names of the witnesses on whose evidence it is found, the signature of the prosecuting attorney, and the record made by the court, is certainly sufficient identification where there is no fraud pretended or charged. State v. Hill, 48 W. Va. 132, 35 S. E. 831. See also White v. Com., 29 Gratt. (Va.) 824.

[c] There is in the federal statutes no mandatory provision requiring such indorsement, and the matter must, therefore, be determined on general principles. Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. ed. 657.

38. Martin v. State, 127 Tenn. 324, 155 S. W. 129.

[a] "An indictment proceeds from the attorney-general to the grand jury, and 'is only signed by the foreman of the grand jury, and therefore, unless it appears from the record that the bill was returned by the jury into open court "a true bill," it cannot appear that it has been before them, and found by them. Not so in the case of a presentment. That is signed by all of the jurors, and we have thus an assurance that they acted on it and found the facts it presents.' State v. Muzingo, Meigs 112. Such indorsement, therefore, was not necessary." Martin v. State, 127 Tenn. 324, 155 S. W. 129.

[b] Reason.—The presentment, as distinguished from the indictment, is signed by all of the jurors, thus showing that they acted upon it and found the facts which it presents. Martin v. State, 127 Tenn. 324, 155 S. W. 129.

[a] It is only evidence of the finding of the indictment, and the object of the statute in requiring it is simply to secure the authenticity and genuineness of the instrument. This end is equally attained when the indictment is presented by the grand jury in open court, and is filed by the clerk with other records. People v. Lawrence, 21 Cal. 368.

[b] In People v. Lawrence, 21 Cal. 368, the courts said: "We are aware that the decisions in England are different; that there the want of the indorsement is fatal to the indictment. The reason is obvious. There the indictment is drawn and presented to the grand jury before any investigation is had upon the accusation. When the deliberation is closed, the jury return the result of their deliberations by the indorsement on the indictment: 'A true bill,' or 'Not a true bill,' or 'Not found.' In this state the investigation is had in the first instance upon the complaint, made either by the public prosecutor, or by private persons, or upon the declaration of one of the grand jurors (Crim. Prac. Act, sec. 213), and it is only after the jury have come to a conclusion against the party accused that the preparation of an indictment is required from the district attorney. The conclusion of the jury is evidenced by the presentation to the court of an indictment, or by a return of the papers from the committing magistrate, if any have been delivered to them, with an indorsement that the charge is dismissed. (Id. sec. 230.) If no papers from the committing magistrate have been in their hands, their judgment upon the complaint is indicated by the fact that no indictment is returned. In some of our sister states, also, the indorsement, 'a true bill' is held essential to the validity of the indictment, but the decisions in this respect have arisen from an adherence to the English rule, even after the English practice had gone out of use."

As to sufficiency of signature, see supra, VIII, A, 7, a, (II).

49. Though the practice is reprehensible, and not to be indulged, the indictment is not invalidated by reason of the making of the endorsement by the clerk of the grand jury, in the presence of, and by the direction of the foreman. The signature is, in fact, the act of the foreman himself in such case, if he in fact subscribes his name to an indorsement, the requirements of the statutes are complied with whether such indorsement is printed on the back of the indictment,⁵⁰ or written thereon by someone other than himself.⁵¹

The indorsement applies to both of two defendants jointly indicted.⁵²

(III.) Effect of.—The required indorsement is evidence that the indictment was duly found⁵³ by a legal grand jury.⁵⁴ It is also the proper evidence that it was found by the required number of grand jurors.⁵⁵

d. Not Found.—In those jurisdictions where bills of indictment are drawn subsequently to the investigation of the grand jury, there are no bills which are indorsed “not found.”⁵⁶ But in jurisdictions where a bill of indictment is sent to the grand jury for adoption or rejection, if it is not found “a true bill,” it should be returned with the clerk merely acting as his amenuensis in the matter. Benson v. State, 18 Ala. 544.

57. Barlow v. State, 127 Ga. 58, 56 S. E. 131, wherein the court said: "In Georgia bills are returned, whether the finding is 'a true bill' or 'no bill.' While there is no direct statute on the subject of the return, such has been the practice, and this is recognized in the Penal Code, §930, where it is declared that 'Two returns of 'no bill' by grand juries, on the same charge or accusation, shall be a bar to any future prosecution for the same offense, either under the same or another name, unless such returns have been procured by the fraudulent conduct of the person charged, on proof of which, or of newly discovered evidence, the judge may allow a third bill to be presented, found, and prosecuted.' If the practice were, as in some jurisdictions, to make no return of bills of indictment except where accusations are approved as true, this section would have no application, and there would be no means of determining that there had been two returns of 'no bill.'"

[a] Historical.—"The mode in which the grand jury formerly returned the result of their inquiries to the court, was, by indorsing on the back of the bill, if thrown out 'ignoramus,' or 'we know nothing of it,' intimating, that though the accusation might possibly be true, no facts had appeared in evidence to warrant that conclusion; . . . But, at the present day, the indorsement is in English absolutely; if found, 'a true bill,' and if rejected 'not a true bill,' or which is the better way, 'not found,' in which case the party is discharged without further answer." 1 Chit. Cr. Law 324. See also Com. v. Smyth, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 473.

[b] Where the indictment considered by the grand jury charges several offenses of a similar character, varying only in degree, a finding of "true bill" as to one of those of lesser degree is equivalent to a finding of "no bill" as to the higher grade. Williams v. State, 13 Ga. App. 83, 78 S. E. 854.

[c] If a bill is indorsed "a true bill," by mistake, instead of "not a true bill," such fact may be shown by affidavit or otherwise, and upon proper motion the indictment should be quashed. State v. Horton, 63 N. C. 595.

[a] "It is a requirement of the law, that the name of the prosecutor shall be indorsed on the indictment, or that the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony it was found, other than the party injured, shall be stated, and that a statement of the fact shall be made at the end of the indictment; . . ." State v. Scott, 25 Ark. 107. As to requirement of indorsement of names of witnesses, see infra, VIII, A, 8, f.

[b] The object of such statutes is to impose a salutary restraint upon the getting up of indictments, by requiring those who are mainly instrumental in procuring the indictment, to indorse their name as prosecutor, and subjecting them to the payment of costs under certain contingencies. Williams v. State, 9 Mo. 270. See also State v. Briggs, 68 Iowa 416, 27 N. W. 358; State v. Loftis, 3 Head (Tenn.) 500; Moyers v. State, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 40. In *State v. Whether Requirement Directory or Mandatory.—Such statutes are merely directory, not mandatory, under some authorities, and a failure to observe the requirement will not invalidate the indictment,⁶⁵ but upon this proposition there are authorities to the contrary, under which the omission is fatal where timely objection is made.⁶⁶

[c] Statutes Not Penal.—Wortham v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 669, 672.

63. State v. Joiner, 19 Mo. 224. See also State v. Elliott, 10 West. L. J. 409, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 572. In this last case, the statute involved provided that in case the indictment was found upon testimony sworn, and sent to the grand jury by order of the court, such fact should be indorsed thereon instead of indorsing the name of the prosecutor. Such an indorsement was made on the indictment. It was held, however, that such indorsement does not prima facie establish that the indictment was found upon testimony sworn and sent to the grand jury, but such fact must be established by proof aside from the indictment and such indorsement.

[a] Where the statute provided that "no indictment . . . shall be preferred, unless the name of the prosecutor be indorsed thereon, except . . . or on the testimony of some witness, other than the party injured, . . ." a statement, that the indictment was found on the testimony of A. B., et al., persons whose property was not injured, indorsed on the back thereof was a sufficient compliance with the statute, and the indictment was, therefore, not subject to quashal because the name of the prosecutor was not indorsed. State v. Scott, 25 Ark. 107.

Limitations on Requirement. — The statutory requirement is generally limited, however, to offenses committed against the person or property of the informer,⁶⁷ and does not apply to offenses committed against the public at large,⁶⁸ nor prevent the prosecuting officer from pre-Rodes v. State, 10 Lea 414), (2) or on plea in abatement (Rodes v. State, 10 Lea [Tenn.] 414), (3) or by introducing the indictment in evidence on the trial (Rodes v. State, 10 Lea. [Tenn.] 414), (4) but not on motion in arrest of judgment (United States v. Lloyd, 4 Cranch C. C. 464, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,615; United States v. Jamesson, 1 Cranch C. C. 62, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,466), (5) the objection after verdict being too late (Ill.—Vezain v. People, 40 Ill. 397, objection too late on error. Ky.—Hayden v. Com., 10 B. Mon. 125. Tenn.—Rodes v. State, 10 Lea 414, wherein the court said: "The reason for the latter conclusion is that the indorsement of the prosecutor is for the benefit of the defendant, and if he chooses not to take advantage of the omission by motion to quash the indictment, by plea in abatement, or by introducing the act in evidence on the trial, he waives the benefit. He cannot be permitted to experiment with the court by trying his case on the merits, and after being found guilty, then rely upon a matter which was intended for his benefit in case he was innocent. And this reason equally applies whether there was in fact a prosecutor, and the omission to indorse his name was intentional, or whether there was no prosecutor at all. He must assert his right before it has been shown to the court, by a trial on the merits, that it was of no consequence to the defendant whether there was a prosecutor or not"), (6) though here again some hold it fatal even on writ of error or appeal. Kirk v. State, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 406, 1 Mor. St. Cas. 480.

[c] In Tennessee, (1) before the Act of 1851-2, it was held that the omission might be taken advantage of at any time by motion to discharge the prisoner, or to quash the indictment, or after verdict, to set the same aside. Wattingham v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 64; Medaris v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 239; State v. Vance, 1 Over. (Tenn.) 481. (2) But now by statute, it is provided that the objection must be taken before verdict. Rodes v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 414; State v. Tankersly, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 582, both under statute providing that it shall not be cause for arrest of judgment, or a reversal thereof that the indorsement be omitted from the indictment.

In this last case, the court said: "As to the omission of the name of a prosecutor, which is third cause of exception, there seems to have been no occasion to name one, since, more than a year having expired after the commission of the offense, the right of such prosecutor to any part of the fine or penalty was barred by the statute limitation. The prosecution is purely a public one, and no prosecutor need be named in such case, even if it be necessary in those cases in which he has an

[a] "The law admits no departure from it (the rule requiring indorsement) excepting when the district attorney, acting in his official capacity, sends in a bill to the grand jury. That officer then becomes in effect the prosecutor—a responsibility assumed in few instances, and then only for sufficient reasons." In re Memorial, etc. of Citizens' Assn., 8 Phila. (Pa.) 478.

[a] Such indorsement (1) is not necessary where the indictment is found upon the evidence of a witness sent to the grand jury, either at their request, or by direction of the court. United States v. Shackelford, 3 Cranch C. C. 287, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,261;

United States v. Sandford, 1 Cranch C. C. 323, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,221; United States v. Lloyd, 4 Cranch C. C. 467, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,616; Wortham v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 669. (2) Nor is it necessary where founded upon a presentment made upon knowledge of two or more of the grand jurors. United States v. Shackelford, 3 Cranch C. C. 287, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,261; United States v. Dulany, 1 Cranch C. C. 510, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,999; State v. McCann, Meigs (Tenn.) 91.

[b] An indorsement that "this indictment is preferred upon the testimony of the party injured, who was summoned on presentation, and by order of the grand jury," signed by the prosecuting attorney, does not imply that the indictment was preferred on the information of any of the grand jury, and is not a compliance with the statute, which requires the endorsement of a prosecutor in certain cases. State v. Denton, 14 Ark. 343.

71. Page & Adams' Ann. Ohio Gen. Code, §13,572; Pickett v. State, 22 Ohio St. 405; Thompson v. Com., 88 Va. 45, 13 S. E. 304 (Virginia code does not require indorsement on indictment for felony, but only for a misdemeanor).

[a] Where the statute declares that a prosecutor's name shall be indorsed on every indictment for a trespass, not amounting to a felony, a trespass, which amounted to a felony at common law, but which does not amount to a felony under statute cannot be excluded from its operation. State v. Hurt, 7 Mo. 321.

72. In Tennessee (1) under the statute as first enacted, no indictment could be preferred by the grand jury without a prosecutor; but to this provision various exceptions were afterwards made by subsequent statutory amendments (Rodes v. State, 10 Lea 414; State v. Dillon, 1 Head 389), (2) providing that a prosecutor is dispensed with, and the district attorney may file bills of indictment without a prosecutor in certain cases, and among others is enumerated, "a charge of violating the laws against tippling." Neideiser v. State, 6 Baxt. 499, holding offense of retailing liquor on Sunday comes within definition of tippling, and indictment charging same need not be indorsed. (3) An early exception existed in favor of indictments for selling liquor to a slave in violation of the statutes. State v. Gossage, 2 Swan 263.

[a] In Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 348, the indictment was marked, "no prosecutor" necessary, evidently because there was the return of a jury of inquest, which was one of the cases excepted from the requirement that the indictment be indorsed. It was insisted that, as there was no indorsement, it was error not to arrest the judgment. The court said: "But it is immaterial whether the return of the jury inquest was a valid or an invalid return. If the former, no prosecutor was necessary; if the latter, the omission to mark a prosecutor was cured by section 5242 of the code," which provides that one indicted and tried on the merits shall not be entitled to an arrest of judgment because of such omission.

[b] Order of Court.—(1) The statute in Tennessee expressly dispenses with a prosecutor and authorizes the district attorney to file a bill without the usual indorsement: "Upon an order of the circuit or criminal court to file an indictment officially; which may be made when it appears to the court that an indictable offense has been committed, and that no one will be prosecutor." Shannon's Tenn. Code, §7059; Rodes v. State, 10 Lea 414; Lawless v. State, 4 Lea 173; State v. Kittrell, 7 Baxt. 167. (2) The power thus conferred upon the trial courts is in its very nature discretionary, and not subject ordinarily to revision. Rodes v. State, 10 Lea 414. See Lawless v. State, 4 Lea 173.

[c] Requisites of Order.—(1) It is not necessary that the order recite that it appears to the court that an indictable offense has been committed (State v. Kittrell, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 167), (2) and that no one will be prosecutor (Bennett v. State, 8 Humph. (Tenn.)

118, 123, it will be presumed that this fact was properly made known to the court before the order was made). (3) Nor is it essential that the order should state the person on whom the offense was committed (State v. Kittrell, supra), (4) or show that it was made upon an examination of witnesses as directed by statute, the presumption being that the court did its duty in this respect. Lawless v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 173; Bennett v. State, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 118, 123; Simpson v. State, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 456.

[d] Time for Making Order.—(1) It would seem that the court should make such order before the return of the indictment. The failure of the grand jury to reconsider the indictment after an order of the court directing the attorney general to prosecute officially cannot be taken advantage of except upon objection properly made before a trial on the merits. Parham v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 498; Rodes v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 414. (2) In Parham v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 498, the order was not made until after the return of the indictment. Entries on the record were held to raise the presumption that after the making of such order, the grand jury again retired and returned the indictment properly indorsed.

[e] Those indictments not coming within the exceptions, still require a competent prosecutor. State v. Dillon, 1 Head (Tenn.) 389; State v. Gossage, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 263.

(III.) Who May and Who May Not Be Indorsed.⁷⁶ — The indorsement of an incompetent prosecutor is, in legal effect, the same as if no indorsement at all was made.⁷⁷ Accordingly it is necessary to determine who may and who may not be a prosecutor.⁷⁸

A prosecutor, within the meaning of the statutory provisions, is one who appears before the grand jury, and has his name entered as prosecutor and undertakes the prosecution of a particular case, subject to the burdens and penalties which that office and undertaking impose.⁷⁹ It does not include one who merely complains and makes known to the grand jury that a particular offense has been committed by a particular person, and asks that the complaint be investigated and acted upon,⁸⁰ or who is summoned by the grand jury to give evidence on the indictment.⁸¹ It is not indispensable that the informer or prosecutor should have personal knowledge of the facts necessary to convict the defendant.⁸²

More particularly, an infant may be indorsed as a prosecutor under such statutes,⁸³ though their spirit and purpose are better accomplished

State*, 63 Ala. 120, holding that the name of the owner of stock complaining of an injury thereto, pursuant to a statutory provision that no indictment shall be found in such case except upon complaint of the owner of the stock, need not be indorsed on the indictment as prosecutor merely because he makes such complaint.

[a] "It is not required that the person who makes the information to set the machinery of the law in motion should be the prosecutor marked on the indictment, or be a witness sworn for the commonwealth on the trial." Com. v. Barr, 25 Pa. Super. 609.

81. Com. v. Hutcheson, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 355; Wortham v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 669 (one compelled to be an informer cannot be considered a prosecutor). And see United States v. Lloyd, 4 Cranch C. C. 467, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,616; also Rex v. Lukens, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 5, 1 L. ed. 13, wherein the court said: "It often happens that all the witnesses necessary to support a public prosecution are brought unwillingly to give evidence; and the act could never intend there should be a prosecutor indorsed, unless there was really a prosecutor existing, for the words in the act are, the prosecutor. And as no person in the present case is proved to be active in carrying on the prosecution, the defendant must plead to the indictment without any indorsement."

82. Com. v. Barr, 25 Pa. Super. 609. [a] "If he is able to swear that he is informed of them and believes the facts stated in the information to be true is all that has ever been required to justify a magistrate in issuing a warrant for the arrest of the alleged criminal." Com. v. Barr, 25 Pa. Super. 609.

[b] It is no cause for quashing an indictment that the prosecutor in a former indictment was not the same as the prosecutor in the pending indictment. Allgood v. State, 87 Ga. 668, 13 S. E. 569.

by the indorsement of the father.⁸⁴ It has been held, however, that in the absence of a statute a married woman cannot be indorsed as prosecutrix,⁸⁵ and that the husband is not a competent prosecutor against his wife.⁸⁶ The indictment will not be dismissed, though the prosecutor be insolvent, if the court would ex officio have directed a prosecution to be instituted.⁸⁷ The foreman of the grand jury may be marked as prosecutor.⁸⁸

The court has no right to order one, against whom an offense is alleged to have been committed, indorsed as prosecutor after the finding of the indictment, without his consent, by express provision of statute in one state.⁸⁹ Before sending the indictment to the grand jury, however, a discretion resides in the prosecuting officer to indorse as prosecutor whomsoever he may think fit.⁹⁰

(IV.) Sufficiency of Indorsement.—The object of statutes providing simply for the indorsement of the name of the prosecutor is attained as well and readily by the indorsement being made on the inside as on the back of the indictment.⁹¹ Merely writing the name on the in-

(Tenn.) 481, holding that an infant's property is liable for costs to satisfy a fine and costs adjudged against him.

84. Though the statute contemplates that the injured party shall be endorsed as prosecutor, upon an indictment for a trespass, yet where the injured party is an infant or a married woman, the spirit and purpose of the statute are better accomplished by permitting the name of the father or husband to be indorsed as prosecutor. State v. Harrison, 19 Ark. 565.

85. Wattingham v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 64; Moyers v. State, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 40 (the reason assigned being that she is wholly irresponsible, in law, either for costs or damages, and not amenable for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution). See also State v. Tankersly, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 582.

86. State v. Tankersly, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 582.

[a] Reason.—The test as to whether one is a competent prosecutor "seems to be that the party prosecuting shall be liable for costs, and also that he shall be liable to action by the party prosecuted, for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution. It would hardly be maintained that the wife can sue, at law, her husband to recover damages for either false imprisonment or malicious prosecution. The husband, therefore, cannot become a prosecutor on an indictment against his wife." State v. Tankersly, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 582.

[b] If his name is so indorsed to

90. Subject, however, to the interference of the court, in cases where the exercise of such a power may operate injuriously to an individual. State v. English, 5 N. C. 435.

[a] It is not necessary that one, indorsed as a prosecutor, should have given directions to the prosecuting officer to prepare the indictment, or that he should have authorized him in express terms to indorse his name. If it be done with his consent, without any disclaimer on his part, and if he furnished the testimony in part upon which the indictment was found, it is sufficient. Barr v. State, 74 Ga. 499.

91. Williams v. State, 9 Mo. 270. In dietment, without any memorandum showing the purpose for which it is written, is not a sufficient indorsement.⁹²

The prosecutor is sufficiently designated as such by the abbreviation "pros." after his name.⁹³ The statutes sometimes, in express terms, require that the title or profession,⁹⁴ as well as the place of residence,⁹⁵ of the prosecutor, shall be added to the indorsement of his name, their omission being fatal.⁹⁶

f. *Names of Witnesses for Prosecution.*⁹⁷ — (I.) Necessity and Object. Statutes in some jurisdictions expressly require the names of the witnesses, on whose evidence the indictment is found, to be stated at the foot of or indorsed thereon.⁹⁸ Independently of any statute, however, this case, the court said: Indeed, "it is most convenient and proper so to make it. It being the universal practice, so far as we have knowledge, to make the indorsement on the inside of the indictment, we would not feel authorized to change that practice, unless the point had been distinctly ruled otherwise."

[a] Of course, the statutes generally provide that the name of the prosecutor shall be written at the foot of or indorsed on the indictment, and not simply for such indorsement. See supra, VIII, A, e, (I).

92. Medaris v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 239.

[a] Sufficient Memorandum. "Where the name of a person, preceded by the words 'good for costs,' is found indorsed upon an indictment for a misdemeanor, when presented to the court as a true bill by the grand jury, such name so indorsed will, when nothing appears to the contrary, be presumed to be that of the prosecuting witness. It is not error to overrule a motion to quash such indictment on the ground that the person whose name is indorsed does not affirmatively appear to have been the prosecuting witness." Munson v. State, 20 Ohio St. 232.

93. McGuire v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 621, wherein the court said: "It would, perhaps, have been as well to have written the word 'prosecutor' in full, but the abbreviation in the place, and in the connection in which it is placed, could have had no other meaning, and we cannot arrest the judgment for a deficit of this character."

Dever*, 10 Leigh (Va.) 685, wherein it was held by the general court, that the statute requiring the title or profession of the prosecutor to be written at the foot of the indictment was only directory to the officers of the court, and, therefore, that the failure to comply with the requisition of the statute in that case was no ground for quashing the indictment.

[b] Under the Iowa code, in connection with the requirement that the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury shall be indorsed on the indictment, is the further provision that the "minutes of the evidence of each witness examined before the grand jury, taken by the clerk of the grand jury, must be presented with the indictment to the court." *State v. Reprint 1061, all of last cases holding requirement that foreman "write his initials against the name of each witness sworn by him and examined touching such bill of indictment" directory and not imperative.

[a] "It is a direction to him (the foreman) to do an act that does not require the concurrence of the grand jury. It may be done without their knowledge and consent; it is not a constituent part of the indictment itself, nor of the finding of the grand jury, no more so than an indorsement made by the clerk when it was received that it was in open court. Should it be held that it is essential to the indictment that the indorsement should be made, the consequence would be that the foreman of the grand jury could, by accident or design, destroy the validity of an indictment after it had been duly found,

by omitting to indorse the names of all the witnesses on it, and this he could do if opposed to the return, without the knowledge of the rest of the jury. That such could have been the intention of the law would require the clearest and most unequivocal language to justify the conclusion. Such, however, was not the intention and such are not the legal consequences of the indorsement. We have said, that it is merely directory to the foreman, and several conclusions doubtlessly influenced the legislature in the enactment of the law. It afforded the prosecuting attorney a convenient reference on the trial of the names of the witnesses to prove the offenses charged. It enabled the accused, by knowing the names of the witnesses, not only to make his objection to their competency, but to prepare for discrediting them should they not be worthy of credit. This had become more necessary, since by the change of the law the witnesses were not sworn in open court, but by the foreman of the grand jury; and we have no doubt but that the accused had a right to insist on the names of the witnesses being indorsed, before he could be required to plead; and it would seem if any of them were incompetent, that he ought to be allowed the benefit of excepting to such want of competency, because the finding of the grand jury ought to be on legal testimony." Steele v. State, 1 Tex. 112.

[b] The defendant may move to require the prosecuting attorney to indorse the names of the witnesses, where they are omitted. Jacobs v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 410, 34 S. W. 110. And see Holmes v. State (Tex. Crim.), 156 S. W. 1172.

[c] In Kentucky, (1) the case of Sutton v. Com., 97 Ky. 308, 30 S. W. 661, seems to have regarded the code as mandatory, it holding that the absence of the indorsement affords a ground for quashing the indictment, if a motion to that effect and for that reason is made by the defendant in proper time. (2) But in Com. v. Glass, 107 Ky. 160, 53 S. W. 18, it was held that where the name of a witness is omitted from oversight, or from the fact that he is not regarded as a material witness, it is no ground for quashing the indictment, especially where the names of other witnesses appear on the indictment. (3) And in Hendrickson v. Com., 146 Ky. 742, 143 S. W. 433, and Dowell v. Com., 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1344, 108 S. W. 847, it was held that the statute is directory.

[d] Motion To Quash Not Reviewable.—Under a statute providing that the decision of the lower court upon a motion to set aside an indictment shall not be subject to exception, the decision of the court upon a motion to set aside the indictment upon the ground that the names of all the witnesses are not indorsed thereon is not subject to exception, and cannot be reviewed upon appeal. *Slaughter v. [a] The indorsement is not essential to the validity of the indictment, and the failure to make the indorsement cannot raise a presumption that no witnesses were sworn or examined where the statute expressly provides for the making of such indorsement, upon the application of a defendant, whenever it has been omitted. People v. Glen, 173 N. Y. 395, 404, 66 N. E. 112.

[b] Though such failure is not cause for setting aside or quashing the indictment, as it may be important for defendant, in preparing for trial, to know the names of the witnesses on whose testimony it was found, the not appear indorsed on the indictment in the manner prescribed by law.⁹

The object of the indorsement is to inform both the people and the accused of the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony the indictment is based, and thereby give them both an opportunity to secure these witnesses at the trial.¹⁰

(II.) Particular Names Indorsed.—Whether considered mandatory or merely directory, the requirement of these statutes is confined strictly to the names of those upon whose evidence the indictment is found.¹¹

[a] "In our practice the putting of the names of the witnesses who were examined before the grand jury on the indictment, serves several useful purposes: It furnishes information to the Clerk in issuing subpoenas for the State; to the Prosecuting Attorney in calling witnesses at the trial, and it advises the accused of the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony the indictment was found, which may be important to him in preparing for trial." State v. Johnson, 33 Ark. 174.

[b] The object is twofold: First, to prevent malicious accusations being made by unknown and secret prosecutors; and second, and chiefly, that the accused may to some extent be informed what witnesses he will have to confront at the trial. State v. Hawks, 56 Minn. 129, 140, 57 N. W. 455.

[c] "The statute requiring the names of all material witnesses to be indorsed on the indictment is a most just and humane provision. It is right that when a citizen's liberty or life is endangered that he should know the names of the witnesses by whom the charge is to be made good. By so knowing he can prepare his defense." State v. Steifel, 106 Mo. 129, 17 S. W. 227.

[d] Compare Smith v. State, 165 Ala. 50, 51 So. 610, wherein the court said: "It seems that it would need no discussion to show that the names of the witnesses for the state, written upon the back of the indictment, constitute no part of the indictment; and there is no law requiring that a list of these be served upon defendant or counsel appearing for him. These names are written upon the indictment for the benefit of the state, in order that the clerk of the court may be sure to summon the right witnesses for the state in each case, and not for the purpose of putting the defendant on notice of what witnesses the state will use." That indorsement is not required in this, as well as a few other states, see supra, this section.

[a] Where, in the investigation by a grand jury (1) of a charge against one person, evidence is elicited which proves that another person is guilty of the same or another crime, the jury may, on such evidence, indict the latter person without recalling and re-examining the witnesses, and in such case it would be its duty to indorse the names of the witnesses on the indictment. State v. Beebe, 17 Minn. 241. [a] Where the names of several witnesses were noted on an indictment by the foreman of the grand jury, the presumption is, in the absence of any contrary showing, that they were the witnesses, and the only witnesses upon whose evidence the indictment was found. Andrews v. People, 117 Ill. 195, 7 N. E. 265.

indorsement, complied fully with the mandate of the statute.¹⁷

(III.) Time of Making.—Statutes providing for this indorsement generally specify that it should be made before the indictment is presented to the court.¹⁸ It is well settled, however, that the court has authority at the trial to allow such indorsement, even where none was made to start with.¹⁹

(IV.) Names of Additional Witnesses.—The prosecuting officer may indorse the names of additional witnesses on the indictment after it is returned into court.²⁰ Indeed, statutes expressly provide that the court may, at any time, direct the indorsement of this class of witnesses.²¹ But, independently of such statutes, it is within the discretion on the indictment is conclusive that the grand jury did not take such evidence into account in finding "a true bill." State v. Hawks, 56 Minn. 129, 140, 57 N. W. 455.

[c] From the fact that there is noted or indorsed on the indictment, "See, for other witnesses, off. C and P", no presumption can arise that witnesses other than those whose names are noted testified before the grand jury. Andrews v. People, 117 Ill. 195, 7 N. E. 265.

20. Germolgez v. State, 99 Ala. 216, 13 So. 517.

[a] The fact that, after a copy of the indictment was furnished to the defendant, the prosecuting attorney indorsed upon it the names of additional witnesses for the state affects neither the indictment nor the copy furnished the defendant, this indorsement being a mere memorandum of the prosecuting attorney. *Dobson v. 21. Okla. Comp. Laws, 1909, §6691; Hawkins v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. 385, 123 Pac. 1024; Vance v. Ter., 3 Okla. Crim. 208, 218, 105 Pac. 307 (after jury impaneled).

[a] When new witnesses are found, (1) or for other good reasons appearing to the court (and it need not state them) it may, at any time, permit the names of such witnesses to be indorsed on the indictment by simply complying with the statute. Cochran v. State, 14 Okla. 108, 76 Pac. 672, affirmed, 147 Fed. 206, 77 C. C. A. 432. (2) This right seems to be limited to felony cases less than capital, however. Bigfeather v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. 364, 123 Pac. 1026, holding that in felony cases less than capital the names of additional witnesses may be indorsed at any time, within the discretion of the court, and this discretion will not be reviewed upon appeal unless the record shows that it was abused. And see Hawkins v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. 385, 123 Pac. 1024.

[b] The statute with reference to indorsing the names of additional witnesses upon an indictment or information in misdemeanor cases has no application to felony cases. Star v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. 210, 131 Pac. 542.

[c] The trial court, however, should see to it that the right of the prosecution to indorse the names of additional witnesses is not abused, and should grant or refuse leave to indorse, in furtherance of justice. Cochran v. United States, 14 Okla. 108, 76 Pac. 672, affirmed, 147 Fed. 206, 77 C. C. A. 432.

[d] When such indorsement is to be made, the proper practice is to serve a written notice, containing such names as are to be indorsed, upon the defendant or his counsel. Colbert v. State, 4 of the court to allow such indorsement at any time, even after the trial has begun.²² And in any case, the accused cannot complain unless it appears that such indorsement was an abuse of such discretion.²³

(V.) Sufficiency of Indorsement.—The statutes do not prescribe who shall make the indorsement, and, so long as it is made by one who represents the state it is sufficient.²⁴ The foreman has discharged his duty when he sees that the proper indorsement is made,²⁵ and whether he writes the names himself, or has it done by the prosecuting attorney or some member of the grand jury other than himself, is a matter of no consequence.²⁶ The purpose of the requirement is notice to the accused,²⁷ and it is as well given when written on one part of the paper upon which the indictment is drawn as on another.²⁸

Okl. Crim. 500, 113 Pac. 558. And see Vance v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 208, 105 Pac. 307.

22. State v. Dowd, 39 Kan. 412, 18 Pac. 483; State v. Teissedre, 30 Kan. 476, 2 Pac. 650; State v. Cook, 30 Kan. 82, 1 Pac. 32; State v. Lowe, 6 Kan. App. 110, 50 Pac. 912; State v. Jones, 2 Kan. App. 1, 42 Pac. 392.

[a] Continuance.—It is also within the discretion of the court to grant or refuse a continuance requested by defendant on account of the indorsing of such names. State v. Jones, 2 Kan. App. 1, 42 Pac. 392.

[b] If the accused is surprised at the allowance of permission to indorse the names of additional witnesses, his motion for a continuance should set up the facts constituting his surprise and what evidence, if any, he can produce if the case is continued to rebut the testimony of such additional witnesses. Star v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. 210, 131 Pac. 542.

23. Colo.—Boykin v. People, 22 Colo. 496, 45 Pac. 419, cannot complain where he was not surprised by such indorsement. Kan.—State v. Lowe, 6 Kan. App. 110, 50 Pac. 912; State v. Jones, 2 Kan. App. 1, 42 Pac. 392. Okla.—Hyde v. Ter., 8 Okla. 69, 56 Pac. 851 (unless it clearly appears that it was prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant); Colbert v. State, 4 Okla. Crim. 500, 113 Pac. 558; Cavett v. Ter., 1 Okla. Crim. 493, 503, 98 Pac. 890, 102 Pac. 646.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) Permitting the indorsement of additional witnesses on the same day, but prior to the commencement of the trial was not error in State v. Doyle, 107 Mo. 36, 17 S. W.

751. (2) Nor did the court abuse its discretion in allowing the indorsement of the name of the complaining witness, who had sworn to the facts stated in the charge, after the jury was impaneled and sworn. State v. Dowd, 39 Kan. 412, 18 Pac. 483.

24. State v. Jones, 2 Kan. App. 1, 42 Pac. 392.

25. Bartley v. People, 156 Ill. 234, 40 N. E. 831.

[a] Signature of Foreman.—It is not objectionable that the foreman does not sign the certificate that the "witnesses marked X" were sworn and examined, under a statute curing defects in form. State v. Long, 143 N. C. 670, 57 S. E. 349.

26. Bartley v. People, 156 Ill. 234, 40 N. E. 831.

[a] The object of the statute is as well accomplished when their names are written by the prosecuting attorney as when they are in the handwriting of the foreman. The indorsement is the act of the foreman, no matter who does the writing. Bartley v. People, 156 Ill. 234, 40 N. E. 831.

[b] But the duty of indorsing the names of witnesses upon an indictment is not imposed upon the prosecuting attorney, except as it is made his duty to attend upon the grand jury and prepare indictments. Accordingly, no indorsement by the prosecuting attorney is proper after the indictment is filed. People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422, 428, 93 N. W. 1084.

27. See supra, VIII, A, 8, f, (I).

28. Scott v. People, 63 Ill. 508, wherein the names of the witnesses on behalf of the prosecution were indorsed on the indictment, just under the name

The statutes are fully complied with when it appears from the indictment that the witnesses' names are indorsed upon it.²⁹ A misnomer of the witness neither invalidates the indictment,³⁰ nor requires of the prosecuting attorney. The court said: "The statute has made it the duty of the foreman to note on the indictment the names of the witnesses upon whose evidence the same shall have been found. In this case the statute was strictly pursued, as the names of the witnesses were noted on the indictment. The manner in which they were noted gave notice to the accused as effectually as if they had been written on any other part of the instrument."

29. Bartley v. People, 156 Ill. 234, 40 N. E. 831.

[a] A statement, indorsed on an indictment, that it was found on the testimony of several persons, naming them, whose property was not injured, and signed by the prosecuting attorney, though not a literal is a substantial compliance with a statute requiring that the name of the prosecutor shall be indorsed on the indictment, or that the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony it was found, other than the party injured, shall be stated, and that a statement of the fact shall be made at the end of the indictment. State v. Scott, 25 Ark. 107.

[b] Where the indorsement set out the names of the witnesses, with a check-mark opposite two of them, the omission of the check-mark in the certificate that "witnesses whose names are marked thus . . . were sworn and examined," is an informality cured by a statute curing defects in form, where there is no evidence that these witnesses were not sworn. State v. Sultan, 142 N. C. 569, 54 S. E. 841.

[c] Though the practice is for the clerk to indorse the names of the witnesses to be examined, that the indorsement is not signed by the clerk is not fatal to the indictment. Bennett v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 472.

30. In People v. Quinn, 127 Cal. 542, 59 Pac. 287, the name of the witness G. W. Ogden was held sufficiently indorsed as — Ogden, where the defendant immediately after the indictment knew who was meant by the name as indorsed.

[a] In People v. Crowey, 56 Cal. 36, the real name of the witness was Gottlieb Diefenbach, and was indorsed on the indictment F. Diefenbach. It appeared that he gave his name to the grand jury as F. Diefenbach, and it also appeared "that there was probably but one person of the name of Diefenbach in the county of Napa (when the indictment was found), or even in the state." It was held that the lower court did not err in denying a motion to set aside the indictment.

[b] In State v. Phelps, 5 S. D. 480, 59 N. W. 471, it was held that where it affirmatively appeared by the record that a defendant was neither surprised, misled, nor prejudiced, a motion to quash an indictment on the ground that the name of a witness called and examined before the grand jury was not indorsed thereon was properly overruled, when the name "Dr. F.," by mistake, was written instead of "M. F.," and the evidence offered by defendant conclusively showed that the witness was a physician, and had for many years been known and addressed as "Dr." or "Doc," and that both he and his counsel clearly understood who was designated by the indorsement.

[c] The fact that a witness whose name appears to be indorsed on the indictment has no real existence does not invalidate the indictment. State v. McChesney, 16 Mo. App. 259, 267, reversed on other grounds in 90 Mo. 120, 1 S. W. 841.

[d] Alteration of Indorsement.—The fact that the name of a witness for the state, on the back of the indictment, was erased and the word "dead" written opposite the erased name, and that the indictment in this condition was given to the jury, does not constitute reversible error, especially where it does not appear when the erasure was made and the word "dead" written, or that, by the exercise of due diligence, the condition of the indictment could not have been discovered by the defendant or his counsel and the attention of the court called to it during the progress of the trial. Martin v. State, 5 Ga. App. 606, 63 S. E. 605.

(VI.) Competency and Calling. — A treatment of the subjects of the competency of witnesses not indorsed,³² and of compelling the calling of witnesses whose names are indorsed,³³ can be found in another work.

B. INFORMATION OR ACCUSATION.³⁴ — 1. In General. — Statutes of many states prescribe the form of the information or accusation to be used therein.³⁵ But if there is no statute prescribing the form of the information, it is entirely governed by the common law.³⁶ It is in its structure similar to an indictment.³⁷ It may consist of different counts.³⁸

Where the pleading alleges all the facts necessary to constitute the crime sought to be charged, it is not defective merely because the word "information" is not used in the body of the instrument.³⁹

2. Caption. — While it is best for an information to have a correct caption,⁴⁰ yet its absence⁴¹ or errors in it,⁴² are not fatal to the information, since it constitutes no part of it.⁴³

State*, 17 Fla. 183.

[a] It is surplusage, pure and simple, and neither adds to nor takes from the charge. Cox v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 129, 104 Pac. 1074, 105 Pac. 369; Caples v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 72, 104 Pac. 493, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033.

Like the caption to an indictment,⁴¹ it states the venue,⁴² the title of the action,⁴³ and the title of the court in which the information is filed, including the time and place where it is held.⁴⁷

Nature of Offense.—The nature of the crime charged in the information need not be designated in the caption; if designated, such designation is immaterial and purposeless,⁴⁸ and the facts stated in the body of the pleading must determine the crime of which the defendant stands charged and for which he must be tried.⁴⁹

44. See supra, VIII, A, 3, c.

45. See State v. Taylor, 167 Mo. App. 104, 150 S. W. 1126, holding that "it is not necessary to state any venue in the body of any indictment or information; but the county or other jurisdiction named in the margin thereof shall be taken to be the venue for all the facts stated in the body of the same."

46. See Rivers v. State, 144 Ind. 16, 42 N. E. 1021 (holding an irregularity in failing to give title of cause not fatal under a statute providing that no information shall be set aside for any defect which does not tend to prejudice defendant's substantial rights upon the merits); Malone v. State, 14 Ind. 219 (holding defect in title not ground of quashal).

47. A statement of the title of the court (1) to which the information is presented is sufficient, without naming the county (State v. Mathis, 21 Ind. 277), (2) the omission being a technical error or defect which does not affect the substantial rights of the defendant, where it otherwise appears, and therefore, to be disregarded by the court. People v. Biggins, 65 Cal. 564, 4 Pac. 570.

[a] That the information recites that it is presented in the "count court" instead of "county court" does not render it invalid, this being clearly a typographical error, and there being but one court, the "county court," in which an information can be filed. Whitley v. State (Tex. Crim.), 56 S. W. 69.

[b] That the court is described as a superior court of the "state" when it is a superior court of the "county" is not fatal on motion in arrest of judgment. State v. Costello, 29 Wash. 366, 69 Pac. 1099.

[c] An entire omission to state the name of the court is not fatal, under a statute providing that no information

(shall be set aside for mistake in the name of the court, or any other defect which does not tend to prejudice defendant's substantial rights upon the merits. Rivers v. State, 144 Ind. 16, 42 N. E. 1021. And see State v. Butler, 26 N. D. 231, 144 N. W. 238; State v. Brennan, 2 S. D. 384, 50 N. W. 625.

[d] A misstatement of the term of court (1) does not vitiate the information, where the information shows its presentation in the proper court (Smith v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. 645, 104 S. W. 899). (2) Nor does it constitute ground for reversing a judgment of conviction, where the record proper shows that the information was filed in open court, during a term thereof. Williams v. State, 42 Fla. 205, 27 So. 898.

[e] Place Where Held.—The omission of the name of the place in the county where the court in which the information is filed, there being more than one place for the holding of such court, does not invalidate the information, nor operate to the prejudice of the defendants. State v. Bland, 91 Kan. 160, 136 Pac. 947.

[f] In Texas, "one of the statutory requisites of an information is 'that it shall appear to have been presented in a court having jurisdiction of the offense set forth.' Code Crim. Proc., art. 430, subdiv. 2. . . . This requisite, like all others, must be made to appear by direct affirmative allegation." Bowen v. State, 28 Tex. App. 498, 13 S. W. 787, holding information wherein it does not appear, except inferentially, in what court the same was presented, or that it was presented in any court, defective.

48. United States v. Lim San, 17 Phil. Isl. 273, 278.

49. State v. Wyatt, 76 Iowa 328, 41 N. W. 31; United States v. Lim San, 17 Phil. Isl. 273, 278.

[a] The designation of the crime by name in the caption of the information

3. Showing Presentment by Prosecuting Officer.—The information must show, with sufficient certainty, that it is presented by the prosecuting officer, as informant.⁵⁰ But it is not required that the name of the prosecuting officer be given in the body of the instrument,⁵¹ and a typographical error in the statement thereof does not from the facts alleged in the body of that pleading is a conclusion of law. United States v. Lim San, 17 Phil. Isl. 273, 279.

[b] Usurpation of Judicial Function.—The designation by the prosecuting officer of the crime in the information by its technical name is a usurpation of the powers of the court and, if binding, would be in effect an adjudication by him of the crime of which the accused must be convicted, if he were to be convicted of any offense. United States v. Lim San, 17 Phil. Isl. 273.

50. Adams v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. 35, 81 S. W. 963; Arbuthnot v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024; Johnson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 230; Thompson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 39; Prophit v. State, 12 Tex. App. 233.

As to who may present, see supra, II.

[a] The language of the information on this subject was sufficient in Arbuthnot v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. 509, 34 S. W. 269, 43 S. W. 1024.

[b] That the word "affiant" (1) is used where the words "prosecuting attorney" should be employed is not objectionable on motion in arrest, where the whole information taken together clearly and unmistakably shows that the charge was preferred by the proper officer. Billings v. State, 107 Ind. 54, 6 N. E. 914, 7 N. E. 763, 57 Am. Rep. 77. (2) Nor does it constitute a valid objection where made for the first time on an assignment of error questioning the jurisdiction of the court. Sturm v. State, 74 Ind. 278. (3) It would seem that a motion to quash based upon such ground should be sustained, however. See Sturm v. State, 74 Ind. 278.

[c] Where the commencement of the first count showed that the prosecuting officer made the charge, as informant, the fact that the second count recited that B. who was the prosecuting witness, "further swears" did not necessarily mean that the information was not the official statement of the prosecuting attorney, so as to render it subject to a motion to quash. Objection, at most, amounted to mere informality, in no way prejudicing substantial rights of defendant upon the merits. Fisher v. State, 2 Ind. App. 365, 28 N. E. 565.

[d] Georgia.—(1) An accusation, which corresponds to the information, may declare that "the state of Georgia charges," etc., and need not employ the formula that "the prosecutor, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, charges," etc. Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583. (2) But the use of the latter formula instead of the former does not subject the accusation to demurrer. Mitchell v. State, 126 Ga. 84, 54 S. E. 931.

51. Mimms v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. 339, 81 S. W. 965; Williams v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. 235, 70 S. W. 213; State v. Pratt, 54 Vt. 484.

[a] All that is required is, (1) that it shall sufficiently appear that the prosecution is by the prosecuting officer of the county. State v. Pratt, 54 Vt. 484. (2) It is immaterial whether the name of the solicitor or the name of the maker of the affidavit, upon which the accusation is founded, is formally employed to designate the accuser, who in the name and behalf of the citizens of the state of venue charges the accused with the offense set out in the accusation. Either form may be adopted. Flanders v. State, 9 Ga. App. 820, 72 S. E. 286.

[b] Failure of the prosecuting attorney to write his full name in body of information does not mislead the defendant or prejudice his rights upon the merits. State v. Brock, 186 Mo. 457, 85 S. W. 595, 105 Am. St. Rep. 625, where he used initial of his Christian name.

[c] Where the name of the prosecuting officer is given in the beginning of an information containing more than one count, the failure to give the name of such officer in the beginning of the second and third counts is not a substantial objection. State v. Looker, 54 Kan. 227, 38 Pac. 288.

render the information fatally defective.⁵² It is not necessary that the prosecuting officer in presenting an information shall allege his title to the office,⁵³ and his compliance with all the prerequisites to his right to perform its duties.⁵⁴ Nor is it necessary for him to state that he informs under his "oath" of office.⁵⁵

4. Showing Authority by Which Prosecuted.—The caption or commencement should show the authority by which the case is prosecuted,⁵⁶ by express provision of statute in one state.⁵⁷ But it is not essential, by the weight of authority, that it contain a recital in terms that the prosecution is in the name and by the authority of the state, it being sufficient if the record shows such fact.⁵⁸

52. Mimms v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. 339, 81 S. W. 965 (wherein old blank in which name of B, as county attorney, was inadvertently used instead of C, then county attorney, and whose signature appeared thereto); Adams v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. 35, 81 S. W. 963 (similar to Mimms v. State, supra).

[a] Where the information in its first count recited that it was presented by the county attorney, the omission of the word "attorney" in such recital, in the second count was not fatal. Caskey v. State (Tex. Crim.), 50 S. W. 703.

53. State v. Ballance, 207 Mo. 607, 616, 106 S. W. 60.

54. State v. Ballance, 207 Mo. 607, 616, 106 S. W. 60.

[a] Where the prosecuting attorney alleged "that upon his own knowledge, information and belief and under his oath of office as such prosecuting attorney now here informs the court," this was sufficient. State v. Ballance, 207 Mo. 607, 616, 106 S. W. 60.

55. State v. Webster, 206 Mo. 558, 570, 105 S. W. 705; State v. Platner, 196 Mo. 128, 93 S. W. 403; State v. Sickles, Brayt. (Vt.) 132.

[a] Where an information is duly sworn in an affidavit by the prosecuting attorney, who takes oath that he is the prosecuting attorney and that the information is true, it is sufficient without reciting that the averments were made on the oath of the prosecuting attorney. State v. Pepoon, 62 Wash. 635, 114 Pac. 449.

R. A. 150. Wyo.—Vines v. State, 19 Wyo. 255, 116 Pac. 1013.

[a] "The omission to state, either directly in the information or indirectly by means of entitling it in an action, that the prosecution of the case is carried on in the name of the state and by its authority, is nothing less than a plain violation of the explicit mandate of the state constitution," which requires that all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state. State v. Hazledahl, 2 N. D. 521, 52 N. W. 315, 16 L. R. A. 150.

[b] Several Counts.—The averment of authority need not be repeated at length in subsequent counts, but may be referred to as "in the name and by the authority aforesaid." Vines v. State, 19 Wyo. 255, 116 Pac. 1013. And see Chase v. State, 50 Wis. 510, 7 N. W. 376.

[c] Where it is alleged in the caption of an information that the prosecution is in the name and by the authority of the state of W, and the authority is averred in a second and in subsequent counts as in "the name and by the authority aforesaid," the dismissal of the first count does not render the subsequent counts insufficient for failing to allege that the prosecution was in the name and by the authority of the state. Vines v. State, 19 Wyo. 255, 116 Pac. 1013.

5. Showing Jurisdictional Prerequisites.—The existence of the facts or conditions which the statutes enumerate as prerequisites to the right to prosecute by information need not be set forth in the information itself,⁵⁹ by express provision of statute in some states.⁶⁰ Accordingly, though it may be the better practice to state that the information is based upon the affidavit or complaint of some person,⁶¹

Caples v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 72, 104 Pac. 493, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033 (wherein the court in reviewing the authorities suggests that, as a matter of good pleading, it would be well for indictments and informations to begin with these words); Arie v. State, 1 Okla. Crim. 666, 100 Pac. 23, 33. S. D. State v. Carlisle, 30 S. D. 475, 490, 139 N. W. 127.

[a] It is sufficient when the caption entitles the case as the State of Venue against the defendants, naming them. State v. Devine, 6 Wash. 587, 34 Pac. 154. And see State v. Bednar, 18 N. D. 484, 121 N. W. 614, 20 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 458, following State v. Kerr, 3 N. D. 523, 58 N. W. 27. See also Alderman v. State, 24 Neb. 97, 38 N. W. 36, wherein the caption of the information was: "The State of Nebraska," and the prosecution was conducted in the name of the state of Nebraska; this was held to be sufficient compliance with the constitutional requirement that "all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name of the state of Nebraska."

[b] It is not objectionable that the information runs in the name of the county as well as the state; the name of the county is mere surplusage. State v. Murphy, 49 Mo. App. 270.

[c] In Texas, however, it is imperative that there be a recital in exact conformity to the constitutional and statutory provision. Saine v. State, 14 Tex. App. 144, holding commencement "In the name and by the authority of the state," omitting the words "of Texas," fatally defective.

[d] There is a difference between the constitutional requirement and the statutory requirement in that the statute requires the word "the" before the word "authority." The information is sufficient, however, although the word "the" be omitted, since it conforms to the constitutional requirement. Monroe v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. 441, 120 S. W. 479.

60. Thus, in Indiana, the statute provides that it shall not be necessary in an information or an affidavit, which by the later statutes has been substituted for the information, to state the reason why the proceeding is by information or affidavit instead of indictment. Burns' Ann. St. (Ind.) 1914, §2042; State v. Duggins, 146 Ind. 427, 45 N. E. 603; Wright v. State, 144 Ind. 210, 43 N. E. 10; Hobbs v. State, 133 Ind. 404, 32 N. E. 1019, 18 L. R. A. 774; *Nichols v. no allegation of that fact is necessary.⁶² Nor need it state that it is made by a "credible resident of the county."⁶³ Nor must the information show on its face that it was filed by leave of court,⁶⁴ or that it was filed when the court was in session,⁶⁵ or that the grand jury was not in session.⁶⁶

Preliminary Examination.—Since the want of a preliminary examination is matter in defense or abatement,⁶⁷ it is not necessary, according to the great weight of authority, that the information should set forth the fact of a preliminary examination having been held,⁶⁸ or a waiver affidavit. Mitchell v. State, 126 Ga. 84, 54 S. E. 931.

If, as the statute says, it shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney to file an information upon the affidavit, and then file the affidavit with the information, the latter should show upon its face, when such is the case, that it is predicated upon the affidavit filed with it; otherwise how is the defendant to know who his accusers are, the prosecuting attorney, or some other person? The very object of the statute in requiring the prosecuting attorney to file an information upon the affidavit, and to file it with the information, was to avoid this difficulty, by predicated the information upon the affidavit and showing upon its face that such is the case"); *State v. [a] Under a constitutional requirement that all prosecutions shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state, the information must so conclude. Parris v. People, 76 Ill. 274, followed in Gould v. People, 89 Ill. 216; People v. Martin, 180 Ill. App. 578; Wright v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. 3, 35 S. W. 150, 38 S. W. 811. Compare Nichols v. State, 35 Wis. 308, holding that a constitutional provision that "all indictments shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state," did not apply to an information.

[b] The omission from an information, otherwise sufficient, of this concluding phrase goes to matter of form, and in no degree impairs the jurisdiction of the court (Chemgas v. Tynan, 51 Colo. 35, 116 Pac. 1045), though the information is faulty because of this omission. Chemgas v. Tynan, 51 Colo. 35, 116 Pac. 1045.

79. State v. Carlisle, 30 S. D. 475, 489, 139 N. W. 127, wherein it was urged that the information was defective, for the reason that the phrase "against the peace and dignity of the state of South Dakota" occurs in the body and not at conclusion of information.

[a] Misplacement.—Though the concluding words of the information are inserted before instead of after a charge of prior conviction, such misplacement, being a mere matter of form, is immaterial. People v. Fowler, 88 Cal. 136, 25 Pac. 1110.

[a] The closing of the information "contrary to the form of the statute," etc., applies to each count. State v. Scott, 48 La. Ann. 293, 19 So. 141.

83. State v. Howard, 242 Mo. 432, 147 S. W. 95; State v. Ulrich, 96 Mo. App. 689, 70 S. W. 933.

[a] In State v. Howard, 242 Mo. 432, 147 S. W. 95, the court said: "The conclusion of the information is not limited to the last sentence of each count preceding such concluding words, but applies to all which precedes it.⁸⁴

b. Sufficiency of.—It is sufficient if the conclusion, “contra pacem,” is in substantial conformity with the constitutional or statutory requirement.⁸⁵

If there be but one statute prohibiting the offense and prescribing the punishment, the information properly concludes in the singular, “against the form of the statute.”⁸⁶ If an information conclude contra formam statuti, and the offense charged is not within any statute, constitutional formula is not required at the close of each part of an information, even though such part may charge all the elements of some offense for which the state might have proceeded. It is required only at the end of the entire information or at the end of each separate count, which is the same thing.”

[b] The reasoning of the court in State v. Ulrich, 96 Mo. App. 689, 70 S. W. 933, was as follows: “Since each count in an indictment must conclude as required by the constitution or else be fatally defective, and since if there are two or more counts in an indictment and the last one concludes properly but the others do not, the conclusion in the last will not help or supply the omission in the others, and since a criminal information, by reason of the constitutional provision previously referred to, is that at common law and since by the common law such an information is required to contain all the essentials required in an indictment, it must logically and necessarily follow that each count therein must conclude as an indictment, and that the omission of any count therein to so conclude will not be helped or supplied by the last which does so conclude. Applying this rule to the information in the present case, and it is clear that the count to which the defendant entered his plea of guilty is insufficient and will not support the judgment.”

As to necessity for conclusion to each count of an indictment, see supra, VIII, A, 6, e.

84. People v. Biggins, 65 Cal. 564, 4 Pac. 570 (wherein such contention is characterized as hypercritical); State v. Stickney, 29 Mont. 523, 75 Pac. 201.

85. See Holt v. People, 23 Colo. 1, 7, 45 Pac. 374.

[a] An information concluding “against the peace and dignity of the same people of the state of Colorado,” is a substantial conformity with the requirement that all prosecutions shall conclude “against the peace and dignity of the same.” The word “same” means “the people of the state of Colorado,” and these words are mere surplusage and may be disregarded. Holt v. People, 23 Colo. 1, 7, 45 Pac. 374.

[b] Clerical Errors.—In State v. Calvin, 160 Mo. App. 723, 142 S. W. 470, it was contended that the information was insufficient because it concluded “against the peace and oignity of the state” instead of “against the peace and dignity of the state.” It was found, however, on inspection that the information had been prepared on a typewriter which was badly worn, and the outline of the letters was not clear. It appeared, however, that the stem of the letter “d” was very dim, but the court found the letter “d” to have been used instead of the letter “o” as contended, and held the information not fatally defective on this account.

[c] The omission of the article “the” from before the word “state” is a fatal defect. State v. Skillman, 209 Mo. 408, 107 S. W. 1071; Thompson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 39, s. c., 15 Tex. App. 168. Compare State v. Hellekson, 13 S. D. 242, 83 N. W. 254, holding omission of the article “the” from before the word “peace” not fatal, as such formal clause is wholly unnecessary.

86. State v. Agudo, 5 La. Ann. 185. But see Com. v. Hooper, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 42, holding information founded upon single statute not vitiated by conclusion in plural.

these words may be rejected as surplusage.⁸⁷

7. Signature.—a. In General.—The statutes of several states require that the information be signed or subscribed by the prosecuting attorney,⁸⁸ and the failure to so sign or subscribe is fatal in most,⁸⁹ but not all states.⁹⁰ It is not necessary that the different counts of an information should all be signed by the prosecuting officer, however.⁹¹

b. Time of Signing.—The requirement of the statute is not answered where a paper purporting to be a blank information has been signed by the prosecuting officer before the commission of the offense, afterwards therein attempted to be charged.⁹² Where the signature

c. Who May Sign.—The information cannot be signed by one without authority to do so.⁹⁴ But it is sufficient that the name of the prosecuting officer is signed to an information by his deputy or assistant, where the statute provides for an assistant,⁹⁵ and where the deputy is given the same powers as his principal, it is sufficient if the deputy sign the information in his own name where a proper case therefor is presented.⁹⁶

Where the district attorney is disqualified from prosecuting a case and the court appoints a special prosecutor, the prosecutor so appointed is authorized to sign an information in the case in his own name.⁹⁷

d. Sufficiency of.—A signature by the prosecuting attorney by the initials of his given name is sufficient.⁹⁸

That the information contains the signature of the prosecuting attorney in printed type, instead of the same being written, is an objection merely to a matter of form, which is amendable.⁹⁹ Nor is it objectionable that the name of the prosecuting attorney is written with a type-writer, where it is so affixed with authority and signed by his deputy.¹

The statutes do not in terms require that he should give any description of his official character, and the description does not seem² to

[a] Where a statute provides that the assistant district attorney may perform all the duties of the district attorney in his absence, sickness or inability to perform those duties, the court will presume, when an information is signed by the assistant district attorney, that he performed the duty of the district attorney, owing to the absence, sickness or inability of that officer. State v. Faulkner, 32 La. Ann. 725.

[b] "The proper practice is for the assistant county attorney to sign the name of his principal to the information, yet we think it is sufficient when signed by and in the name of a legally constituted assistant, when no objection thereto before verdict is made." Oelke v. State, 10 Okla. Crim. 49, 133 Pac. 1140.

[c] Though an information be improperly signed by an assistant prosecuting officer, it is not rendered thereby entirely nugatory, it being at most a mere formal error, or irregularity, which may be amended. Browne's Appeal, 69 Mo. App. 159.

97. Williams v. People, 26 Colo. 272, 57 Pac. 701.

[a] And the mere fact that he added to his signature the words "special deputy district attorney," or placed before it the name of the regular district attorney, neither adds to, nor detracts from, the proper authentication thereof in his own name. The additions will be treated as surplusage. Williams v. People, 26 Colo. 272, 57 Pac. 701.

[b] Where the court is without power to appoint a prosecuting officer, except in case of the death of the county attorney or in the case of the absence, sickness or disability of both the prosecuting officer and his deputy, and the record shows the presence of such officer in court at the date of the order appointing a private citizen to prosecute an action, and does not show either the sickness or disability to prosecute of the prosecuting officer or his deputy, but on the contrary shows the opposite, it follows that the court is without power to authorize a private citizen to sign and file the information. A conviction under such a prosecution must be set aside. State v. Brown, 63 Kan. 262, 65 Pac. 213.

[a] An immaterial variance between the name of the county attorney as recited in the information and as signed thereto is not fatal on motion in arrest of judgment. Williams v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. 235, 70 S. W. 213, wherein information stated that "J. S. King" presented it whereas it was signed by "Geo. S. King."

8. Verification or Accompanying Affidavit.⁴—a. Necessity, Nature and Object.—Under the common law, the information was not necessarily verified,⁵ and now unless required by some constitutional or statutory provision, if filed by a prosecuting attorney, it need not be sworn to by him,⁶ or founded upon or supported by any affidavit or torney" is equally as valid as though it should be signed by him as "county attorney." State v. Nulf, 15 Kan. 404.

[b] An objection that an information is signed by the "county attorney," instead of the "prosecuting attorney," is technical and a motion to quash based thereon properly denied. State v. McGann, 8 Idaho 40, 66 Pac. 823.

[a] In State v. Hicks, 178 Mo. 433, 445, 77 S. W. 539, the court discussed its decision in State v. Pohl, 170 Mo. 422, 70 S. W. 695, as follows: "It was inadvertently said in the case of State v. Pohl, 170 Mo. 422, that an information for felony filed on the 24th day of September, 1901, which was after the amendment to the constitution went into effect on the 19th day of December, 1900, need not be under oath, but was sufficient if presented by the attorney-general or the prosecuting attorney of the proper county under his official oath. As a matter of fact, however, the information in that case was supported by the affidavit of a person who had knowledge of the commission of the offense and by whom it was committed, as provided for by section 2478, Revised Statutes 1899, amended by Laws 1901, pages 138 and affirmation,⁷ since such officer acts under his oath of office, and it is not assumed that he will proceed upon information without probable cause.⁸

It has been held for this same reason that constitutional provisions that no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, do not even require an information filed by the prosecuting officer to be verified or supported by affidavit to justify the issuance of a warrant thereon;⁹ but upon this proposition probably

139. Moreover, no objection was taken to the information by motion to quash, but for the first time by motion in arrest, and then upon the grounds only that the information and the allegations therein contained were insufficient to require the defendant to be placed upon trial, and, because the information did not charge the defendant with a crime known to the law. It will thus be seen that no objection was taken to the information as not being sworn to by the prosecuting attorney, and what was said by us in this regard was mere obiter."

John J. Sesnon Co.*, 3 Alaska 595, citing and quoting from United States v. Powers, 1 Alaska 180, 187, wherein the court also said: "It (the information) was filed upon the verified complaint of two reputable witnesses, and that is sufficient."

[c] In Oklahoma, in the absence of a statute requiring verification, the prosecuting attorney, acting on his official oath, may present an information charging a felony, where the defendant having had a preliminary examination before an examining magistrate, or having waived such preliminary examination, was held to the district court for trial for the felony charged. *Henson v. The court will not assume that that oath is not sufficient to warn him against the grave impropriety or criminality of instituting a prosecution for any other reason than the proper administration of justice. The purpose of the official oath is to maintain good faith and guard against unjust and vindictive prosecution. If this fails of its purpose, an additional oath taken by the prosecuting officer to verify the information would also fail."

[a] The court in State v. Guglielmo, 46 Ore. 250, 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 976, said: "The Bill of Rights of this state does not demand that the oath or affirmation sustaining the probable cause shall be reduced to writing, nor does our statute require an information charging the commission of a crime to be verified; and, in the absence of any enactment on the subject, the rules of the common law in relation to informations exhibited by the attorney-general are applicable and controlling. The district attorney of the proper judicial district in this state is responsible for all informations filed, and is not obliged to obtain leave of court to discharge his duty in this particular before he is permitted to exercise the discretion with which the law invests him. As the circuit court is authorized to convene a grand jury when deemed advisable (B. & C. Comp., §1264), indictments and informations are therefore concurrent remedies, and, as the former means of charging the commission of a crime is based on and supported by the oath of the grand jurors, which fact, in this state, need not be recited in the written accusation, so an information, under our statute, need not be verified, for the official oath of the person whose duty it is to prosecute the formal charge complies with the requirement of the organic act, and supplies the necessary oath or affirmation, thereby supporting the probable cause."

[a] In both of the Oklahoma cases cited, it was contended that an information filed by the prosecuting attorney requires no verification other than the official oath of the public prosecutor, and reliance was placed upon State v. Guglielmo, 46 Ore. 250, 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 976. The court in Salter v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. 464, 102 Pac. 719, said: "This contention is obviously without merit. The error of the argument is so self-evident as to require only a passing notice. Counsel overlooks the fact that by the adoption of the fourth amendment of the federal constitution the procedure by information lost its prerogative function or quality. It could not thereafter be the vehicle of preferring any arbitrary accusation. United States v. Tureaud, supra (20 Fed. 621). The constitutional provision in the Bill of Rights is but a reiteration of this essential safeguard of the liberty and security of the citizen against the arbitrary action of those in authority. Such pernicious practice may suit the purpose of despotic power, but is alien to the pure atmosphere of political liberty and personal freedom. The constitution expressly requires a showing of cause before a warrant shall issue, and the constitutional safeguards for security and liberty cannot in this manner be abrogated or abridged. They must stand as adopted by the people." This quotation was made in Snapp v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. 515, 103 Pac. 553, where the court followed the Salter case.

[b] Under the federal practice, (1) the information need not be verified where no warrant of arrest is asked thereon. Weeks v. United States (C. C. A.), 216 Fed. 292, 54 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651. (2) But where an application is made to the court for a warrant of arrest upon the strength of the information, it must be verified, the fourth amendment guaranteeing the defendant against the issuance of a warrant for his arrest, except "upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation." Weeks v. United States (C. C. A.), 216 Fed. 292, 302, 54 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651 (reviewing and distinguishing the federal cases upon the subject); United States v. Baumert (C. C. A.), 179 Fed. 735; United States v. Shepard, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,273. And see United States v. Tureaud, 20 Fed. 621.

[c] Where the defendant was arrested on a warrant issued upon an affidavit stating facts on knowledge and taken before a committing magistrate for preliminary examination, it was held that an information, setting out that it was on the oath of the district attorney, but not sworn to, was nevertheless sufficient, it being accompanied by the papers of the commissioner who held the preliminary examination, including the sworn testimony of the witnesses taken in the presence of the accused. *United States v. [a] Said the court in State v. Hicks, 178 Mo. 433, 445, 77 S. W. 539: "A point is made on the sufficiency of the information which defendant says is invalid for the want of verification by the oath of the prosecuting attorney or some other competent person. This point was raised by motion in arrest in the court below, and is now insisted upon in this court. Since the Acts of the General Assembly, approved March 13, 1901 (Laws 1901, pp. 138, 139) went into effect, which was before the information in the case in hand was filed, all informations are required to be signed by the prosecuting attorney and to be verified by his oath or by the oath of some person competent to testify as a witness in the case, or be supported by the affidavit of such person, which shall be filed with the information (sec. 2477, R. S. 1899; Laws 1901, supra; State v. Bonner, 178 Mo. 424); . . ."

[b] Where the information is supported by the affidavit of a private person it is not necessary that it should be sworn to by the prosecuting attorney or by his assistant. State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. App. 513. See also State v. Brooks, 33 Kan. 708, 7 Pac. 591; State v. Clark, 158 Mo. App. 489, 138 S. W. 894.

[c] A complaint, duly verified, and filed prior to the filing of an information is not such an affidavit as is required by statute. State v. Lawhorn, 250 Mo. 293, 157 S. W. 344.

[d] The mere fact that the affidavit is made by one whose evidence is insufficient in the trial has been expressly decided to be immaterial if it appears he is a competent witness in the case. State v. Clark, 158 Mo. App. 489, 138 S. W. 894; State v. Pitts, 70 Mo. App. 446.

an information in a felony case to be verified, no statute expressly requiring it.¹⁸

Under other statutes the necessity for a verification depends alone upon the court in which the information is filed, and not upon whether it is a felony or a misdemeanor case.¹⁹

Under still other statutes, only where the defendant does not have a preliminary examination, is it necessary that the information be accompanied with the affidavit of some credible person verifying it.²⁰

[a] Reason.—Such informations rest alone upon a preliminary trial had before an examining magistrate in which the defendant is held to answer the charge against him or the waiver of such examining trial by the defendant. Brown v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. 382, 132 Pac. 359; Davis v. State, 4 Okla. Crim. 508, 113 Pac. 220; In re Talley, 4 Okla. Crim. 398, 112 Pac. 36, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805.

[b] “But these preliminary proceedings are not required in misdemeanor cases, and for that reason, and also on account of the provisions of §6644, Snyder’s Comp. Laws, informations charging the commission of a misdemeanor must be verified unless verification be waived by the defendant.” In re Talley, 4 Okla. Crim. 398, 112 Pac. 36, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805.

As to necessity for a verification where no statute requires it, see supra, this section.

19. Thus in Missouri, an information filed in a circuit court must be verified under the express provision of the statute. See supra, this section. The statute in regard to filing informations in justice courts does not require a verification, and none is held necessary. See infra, V, C, 4.

[a] Formerly in Missouri, (1) it was held that an information filed in the St. Louis court of criminal correction need not be verified, where made by the prosecuting attorney, such being in substance the terms of a provision in the act establishing that court, which it was also held was not repealed by the general statute requiring all informations to be verified by the prosecuting attorney, or some other person competent to be a witness, or be supported by the affidavit of such person. State v. Bach, 25 Mo. App. 554; State v. Fitzporter, 17 Mo. App. 271; State v. Zeppenfeld, 12 Mo. App. 574. (2) But under more recent cases, it is now established that one, proceeded against in the city of St. Louis is entitled to have the information which is made the basis of the prosecution verified in the same way as if his prosecution were begun in another locality, it being held that the general law repeals the special statutory provision in this respect. State v. Bennett (Mo.), 11 S. W. 264. And see State v. Bennett, 102 Mo. 356, 14 S. W. 865, 10 L. R. A. 717; also State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 16 S. W. 604, 27 Am. St. Rep. 361, 13 L. R. A. 419.

20. In Colorado, (1) it is required that in all cases in which a preliminary examination has not been had, or when upon such examination the accused has been discharged, that there shall be filed with the information the affidavit of some creditable person, verifying the information upon the personal knowledge of affiant that the offense was committed. Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204, 19 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 491, under Mill’s Ann. St., §1432h. And see Noble v. People, 23 Colo. 9, 45 Pac. 376; Lustig v. People, 18 Colo. 217, 32 Pac. 275; White v. People, 8 Colo. App. 289, 45 Pac. 539. (2) Otherwise, it seems no verification of any kind need be attached to the information. White v. People, supra, wherein the court said: "It seems plain from the statute we are considering that no verification of any kind need be attached to the information. Where a verification is necessary at all, it must be contained in the independent affidavit of some credible person, having knowledge of the commission of the offense, and who is a competent witness to testify in the case. This affidavit must be filed with the information. If a preliminary examination has not been had or waived, or if upon the examination the accused has been discharged, or if the affidavit or complaint on which it has been held has not been delivered to the clerk of the proper court, then the affidavit is necessary; and upon it, by leave of the court first had, the information may be filed."

[a] An unverified information properly charging a misdemeanor, signed by the county attorney, and filed in a court having jurisdiction of the offense, though insufficient to authorize the issuance of a warrant of arrest, is nevertheless sufficient for all other purposes, if not properly challenged. In re Talley, 4 Okla. Crim. 398, 112 Pac. 36, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805.

[b] It is error for a court to overrule a motion to quash an unverified information charging a misdemeanor, but the matter is not jurisdictional. In re Talley, 4 Okla. Crim. 398, 112 Pac. 36, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805. As to time for taking objection generally, see infra, XIV and XV.

App. 723, 105 S. W. 660 (wherein the information contained three counts, the first and third of which were inconsistent with each other).

[a] To swear to two statements one of which absolutely contradicts the other, is, at least, tantamount to a failure altogether to verify. State v. Weyland, 126 Mo. App. 723, 105 S. W. 660.

S.) 272, the prosecuting attorney, by leave of court, amended an information in a murder case by inserting in one place the word "deliberately," and in another "wilfully," but did not reverify the information after amendment, and defendant moved to quash on the ground that it was not verified. The court, after quoting the statute authorizing amendments to informations said: "This statutory provision was ample authority for the action of the court and prosecuting attorney. When the prosecuting attorney added the two words over his own signature and affidavit, he amended the information, and there was no need of a new affidavit, which was no part of the information. Clearly the insertion of the word 'deliberately' did not affect defendant's rights as he was found guilty of manslaughter only. Counsel concede that an information need not be reverified where unimportant amendments are made."

[a] Where the original information is positively verified, it is not ground for quashing an amended information that it was not so verified. State v. Engborg, 63 Kan. 853, 66 Pac. 1007, wherein the word "unlawfully" was added to the information.

[b] Where the amendment is made in the presence of the person verifying the same, the court will assume that the changes were made at his instance or with his full consent, and will not require a verification anew. State v. Nash, 51 S. C. 319, 28 S. E. 946.

[a] A new affidavit and jurat in due form should be appended and subscribed by the prosecuting witness and the officer in the same manner as upon the original information. People v. Lee, 185 Ill. App. 452. As to form and sufficiency of verification, see infra, VIII, B, 8, d.

[b] New Allegations.—Where the information is amended by interlineations containing new and material allegations, it should be reverified. It is error to force a defendant to trial upon such amended information without a verification thereof. Hazleton v. State, 8 Okla. Crim. 184, 126 Pac. 703.

[c] New Offense.—An information cannot be amended by the addition of an entirely new offense unless it be "afterwards sworn to," as provided in case of an original information. Thus, an information, charging defendant with imputing to a female a want of chastity, cannot be so amended, after acquittal, as to charge him with lascivious language in a public place, an offense under a different statute, without being sworn to anew. Hubbard v. Territory, 20 Okla. 764, 95 Pac. 217.

[d] Waiver.—(1) The objection, that an information was not reverified after it was amended, is waived where the defendant demurred to the amended information and was later arraigned and pleaded not guilty without raising the objection as to the verification until after verdict. State v. Stone, 66 Wash. 625, 120 Pac. 76, distinguishing State v. Van Cleve, 5 Wash. 642, 32 Pac. 461, upon the ground that in that case the amendment was in a vital particular and was made after a plea of not guilty and after the commencement of the trial. The defendant, therefore, had no opportunity to object to the amended information or to enter any plea thereto. The court said: "This is not the case here. The appellant's demurrer to the amended information raised the question of its legal sufficiency to charge the crime sought to be charged, but it did not raise any objection that it was not reverified nor was this objection raised in any other manner. The record shows that appellant was arraigned and waived a reading of the information, and without further objection pleaded 'not guilty.' By so doing he waived the objection now urged." itself, and neither adds to the charge therein,²⁸ nor detracts therefrom.²⁹ Its object is not, as in the preliminary examination,³⁰ to satisfy the court that the defendant is guilty;³¹ nor is it for the purpose of evidence, which is to be weighed and passed upon;³² but merely to secure good faith in the institution of the proceedings, and to guard against groundless and vindictive prosecutions.³³

The object of such verification is not, as in misdemeanors, for a showing of probable cause supported by oath or affirmation to authorize the arrest of the accused, and it is not for the purpose of evidence, which is to be weighed and passed upon, but only as we believe, to secure good faith and as a matter of good form in pleading." d. Sufficiency of.—(I.) In General. With the exception of the rules as to a verification upon information and belief,⁴¹ and as to the form of the jurat,⁴² no well defined general rules exist by which to test the sufficiency of the verification or accompanying affidavit, but only a few fragmentary rules based upon a limited number of cases.⁴³

[a] Notary.—(1) A verification before a notary is insufficient in such states. Bailey v. State, 36 Neb. 808, 55 N. W. 241; Davis v. State, 31 Neb. 247, 47 N. W. 854; Richards v. State, 22 Neb. 145, 34 N. W. 346. (2) But in other states, the taking of the verification is held within the statutory authority of a commercial notary. Miller v. State, 122 Ind. 355, 24 N. E. 156; McNulty v. State, 37 Ind. App. 612, 76 N. E. 547, 117 Am. St. Rep. 344. (3) In the latter states, it has been held that the fact that the person, who as notary administers the oath, was employed as a deputy prosecuting officer, does not constitute a valid reason why the accused should not be held to answer the charge in the information. McNulty v. State, 37 Ind. App. 612, 76 N. E. 547, 117 Am. St. Rep. 344.

[b] Waiver of Objection.—An objection to the information on the ground that it was not sworn to before a judicial officer will be waived unless made before trial and verdict. Bailey v. State, 36 Neb. 808, 55 N. W. 241; Hodgkins v. State, 36 Neb. 160, 54 N. W. 86; Davis v. State, 31 Neb. 247, 47 N. W. 854.

43. Necessity for Repeating Venue.

Where the information and the verification thereof are upon the same sheet of paper and the venue is laid in the caption, it is not necessary to repeat the venue in the verification. State v. Bailey, 190 Mo. 257, 276, 88 S. W. 733.

[a] An information as a whole constitutes but one statement; and a verification thereof which says that "the statement contained in the above information is true," is not defective for omitting to say that the statements therein contained are true. Blair v. State, 4 Okla. Crim. 359, 111 Pac. 1003.

[b] The omission of the word "true" in stating that the facts and statements of the information are true according to the information and belief of the prosecuting officer renders the verification defective. State v. Spencer, 43 Kan. 119, 23 Pac. 159.

[c] Statutory Form of Verification or Accompanying Affidavit.—See Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204, 19 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 491 (under Mills' Ann. St., §1432h); Wyo. Comp. St., 1910, §6132; Gustavenson v. State, 10 Wyo. 300, 315, 68 Pac. 1006.

[d] In Colorado, (1) the statute requires that the affidavit supporting the information "set forth the offense," and the name of the person or persons charged with the commission thereof. Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204, 19 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 491. (2) It need not set out the mode or manner of the perpetration of the offense, or the instrument or agency employed to accomplish the result. The details are unnecessary; the ultimate facts are sufficient. Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204, 19 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 491. (3) An affidavit attached to an information declaring that "the facts stated in the foregoing information are true, and the offense therein charged was committed of his own personal knowledge," is as effectual as an averment of the truth of the matters of fact alleged in the information, as though every statement of the information had been embodied in the affidavit. Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204, 19 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 491.

[e] Whether or not an affidavit upon which an information is based complies with the statute must be determined from the context of the affidavit itself, and its statements cannot be attacked by extraneous evidence. Bergdahl v. People, 27 Colo. 302, 61 Pac. 228.

[f] The affidavit (1) is not insufficient because it does not contain the name of the affiant in the body thereof, where the name appears at the bottom thereof, with the jurat of the officer taking it. Snigh v. State (Tex. Crim.), 146 S. W. 891. (2) Nor is it necessary that the affidavit should recite that the affiant is a competent witness. Walt v. People, 46 Colo. 136, 104 Pac. 89; State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. App. 513; State v. Downing, 22 Mo. App. 504.

[g] The affidavit is not required to be signed by the prosecuting attorney. (1) If the information is in fact signed by him and certified to by a proper officer as having been sworn to before him, it is a substantial compliance with the statute. State v. Hicks, 178 Mo. 433, 455, 77 S. W. 539; State v. Zehnder, 182 Mo. App. 161, 168 S. W. 661, 666. (2) But it is not error to allow the affixing of such signature at any time, even after the jury is sworn. State v. Zehnder, 182 Mo. App. 176, 168 S. W. 666.

[h] Sufficient Verifications.—State v. White, 12 Wash. 417, 41 Pac. 182; State v. Regan, 8 Wash. 506, 36 Pac. 472.

As to waiver of objection that information is not sufficiently verified, see infra, XV.

44. Personal Knowledge of Offense. One verifying an information positively need not have actual personal knowledge of the facts constituting the offense charged. Notice or knowledge from hearsay of the particular transaction complained of is sufficient. State v. Penquite, 86 Kan. 970, 122 Pac. 894. See also Bergdahl v. People, 27 Colo. 302, 61 Pac. 228.

[a] It will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that one verifying the information has actual knowledge of the facts stated therein. State v. Lund, 51 Kan. 1, 32 Pac. 657; State v. Brooks, 33 Kan. 708, 7 Pac. 591.

45. Colo.—Brown v. People, 20 Colo. 161, 36 Pac. 1040. Kan.—State v. Hook, 4 Kan. App. 451, 46 Pac. 44. Mo. *State v. [a] Must be positively sworn to, when verified by other than prosecuting officer. State v. Hook, 4 Kan. App. 451, 46 Pac. 44.

[b] Such rule obtains by express provision of statute in some states. Wyo. Comp. St., 1910, §6132, and generally the statutes.

[c] In Missouri, in a case which states its adherence to the rule established in State v. Hayward, 83 Mo. 304, it is nevertheless held that if the affiant swears that the facts stated "are true according to his best knowledge and belief," the verification is sufficient, though affiant be a private citizen, and that case is distinguished upon the recital alone. It is said that "when a person swears to its truth 'according to his best knowledge and belief,' he does all that should justly be required of him. . . . In making such an affidavit the affiant necessarily asserts knowledge of the specific facts recited. . . . The addition of the phrase, 'and belief,' does not impair the force of

[a] A conviction on an information charging a felony by the prosecuting attorney, verified only on information and belief, is not in derogation of the defendant's constitutional guaranty that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, where the prosecution was in fact predicated on a verified complaint filed before an examining magistrate and the action of that officer in holding for trial in the district court. Henson v. State, 5 Okla. Crim. 201, 114 Pac. 630. This case is to be distinguished from those discussed in a subsequent note, (48, [a]) wherein it is held that an information in a misdemeanor case in Oklahoma must be verified positively, since it is the basis of the warrant, the statute providing that such an information verified upon information and belief is sufficient, being unconstitutional.

[b] In Texas, an affidavit upon which the information is based, made by the prosecuting attorney upon his information and belief alone, has been held insufficient. Daniels v. State, 2 Tex. App. 353, 361.

[a] A verification by the prosecuting officer stating that the information "is true according to the best of his information and belief" is a sufficient compliance with the statute. A person who makes such a verification imports that he has information and is entitled to entertain the belief he expresses, and when he swears "to the best of his information and belief," he swears that he has information and belief. State v. Whisner, 35 Kan. 271, 278, 10 Pac. 852. See also State v. Bennett, 102 Mo. 356, 14 S. W. 865, 10 L. R. A. 717, followed in State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 413, 16 S. W. 604, 27 Am. (II.) *The Jurat.*⁴⁹ — The particular form of the jurat is immaterial so long as it shows, when reasonably construed, that the person making the verification appeared before and was sworn by an officer authorized to take it.⁵⁰

A clerical error in describing the officer taking the verification does not invalidate it.⁵¹ When the verification is made before a deputy

Hehn*, 13 Wyo. 269, 276, 79 Pac. 1044. See State v. Boulter, 5 Wyo. 236, 39 Pac. 883, all holding that an information verified on information and belief does not of itself constitute "probable cause supported by affidavit," within meaning of constitutional provisions that "no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by affidavit."

As to necessity for verification of information for purposes of issuing a warrant of arrest, see supra, VIII, B, 8, a.

As to waiver by failure to object at proper time by attack on warrant, see infra, XV.

[a] In Oklahoma, it is held that the statutory provision, that informations in misdemeanor cases are sufficient if verified upon information and belief, is unconstitutional, since the information in such cases is the basis of the warrant, and the constitution provides that "no warrant shall issue, but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation;" and that an information so verified is not sufficient to justify the issuance of a warrant of arrest or to support a conviction. Salter v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. 464, 102 Pac. 719, 139 Am. St. Rep. 935. And see DeGraff v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. 519, 103 Pac. 538. These cases are to be distinguished from Henson v. State, 5 Okla. Crim. 201, 114 Pac. 630, cited supra, and holding that an information in a felony case verified on information and belief is sufficient, since in a felony case the preliminary complaint is the basis of the warrant and not the information itself.

[b] Purpose of Requirement.—The requirement that an information charging a misdemeanor shall be verified in positive terms before a warrant of arrest may issue thereon is intended for the preservation of the personal security and liberty of the individual, by forbidding the issuance of a warrant for his arrest except upon probable cause shown under oath, and by preventing the institution of baseless and unfounded prosecutions. In re Talley, 4 Okla. Crim. 398, 112 Pac. 36, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805.

[c] Positive Verification Sufficient To Sustain Warrant.—An affidavit that the facts stated in an information are true and correct, is a positive verification of the information, and sufficient to sustain a warrant issued thereon. State v. Watson, 6 Kan. App. 897, 50 Pac. 959.

49. As to jurat in verification to complaint, see infra, VIII, C, 4.

[b] Omissions.—The omission of the words "before me," which usually follow after the words "sworn to" is not fatal, where the statute provides that an information shall not be set aside for any defect or imperfection which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits. State v. Smith, 38 Kan. 194, 16 Pac. 254.

As to who may make verification, see supra, VIII, B, 8, b.

As to who may take verification, see supra, VIII, B, 8, c.

51. State v. Derkum, 27 Mo. App. 628, clerical error consisted in writing county clerk, it is proper that the jurat should be signed by such officer in his own name;⁵² and it is not necessary that he sign, in such case, in the name of his principal by himself as deputy,⁵³ though such a signature is also proper.⁵⁴

A signing by the clerk by the initials only of his Christian name is sufficient.⁵⁵ The signature of the clerk, where the verification is taken by the clerk of court, should be attested by the seal of the court.⁵⁶ But, since the courts take judicial notice of the names and signatures of their officers, its omission does not invalidate the verification.⁵⁷ A clerical mistake in the jurat as to the time when the verification was taken does not render the verification insufficient.⁵⁸

9. Indorsements.—a. In General.—Though the statute provides that an information shall be substantially in the form prescribed for an indictment, it is not necessary that it be indorsed “a true information.”⁵⁹

Pfenninger*, 76 Mo. App. 313. Wyo.—Gustavenson v. State, 10 Wyo. 300, 315, 68 Pac. 1006, wherein the court said that while “it was unquestionably the duty of the clerk, under the statute (making him custodian of the seal of the court and providing that it shall be attached to all instruments signed by him in his official capacity), to attach the seal of the court, it does not appear to have been the purpose of the legislature to make the performance of this duty essential to the sufficiency of the verification. The seal is, principally at least, a matter of evidence to identify the officer and establish his official character and authority. If the statute provided that the acts of the officer, not attested by the seal of the court, should be void, a different question would be presented and a different question might arise if the legality of the defendant’s arrest were at issue under Section 4 of the Bill of Rights. But neither of these questions is involved, and the courts take judicial notice of the names and signatures of their officers, and the seal of a court need not be attached to the jurat of an affidavit, sworn to before its clerk, and to be used only in such court.”

[a] Presumption.—When the attention of the court is called to the signature of the clerk by a motion to quash, it will be presumed in the absence of any evidence to the contrary that he inspected the signature of the jurat and saw that it was genuine. State v. Pfenninger, 76 Mo. App. 313.

58. State v. Sassaman, 214 Mo. 695, 725, 114 S. W. 590, giving date as “25th day of February,” instead of “January.” And see State v. Fraser, 161 Mo. App. 333, 342, 143 S. W. 545, holding that the fact that the verification is dated the day following the filing of the information is not fatal where there is no evidence to show that it was not verified when filed, and there is nothing to show but what it was simply a clerical error.

59. State v. Belding, 43 Ore. 95, 71 Pac. 330.

An indorsement of approval by the prosecuting officer is required by express provision of statute in one state.⁶⁰

b. Nature of Offense.—An indorsement of the character of the offense charged is for convenience only, and forms no part of the substance of the charge.⁶¹ It is advisable that the prosecuting officer or clerk, if he makes such indorsement at all, should describe the offense as accurately as is consistent with brevity;⁶² but a mistake in this particular can neither enlarge nor reduce, nor vitiate the authentic accusation which is contained only in the body of the information.⁶³

c. Names of Witnesses for Prosecution.⁶⁴—(I.) Necessity and Object. Statutes, requiring that the prosecuting officer indorse on the information the names of all the witnesses for the prosecution known to him at the time of filing the same, are almost universal.⁶⁵ Indeed, such [a] Reason.—(1) "The district attorney is alone responsible for informations returned into court, the filing of which affords conclusive evidence of his intention to prosecute the persons charged; and, as the law does not require the performance of vain things, no necessity would appear to exist for indorsing the information in the manner insisted upon." State v. Belding, 43 Ore. 95, 71 Pac. 330. (2) But where the information is indorsed "A true information," under which appear the printed words of the name of the district attorney, the indorsement substantially complies with the statute, if such indorsement is necessary. The officer adopts the printed signature, binding him as effectually as if it is personally subscribed by him. State v. Belding, 43 Ore. 95, 71 Pac. 330.

As to requirement of indorsement "a true bill" on an indictment, see supra, VIII, A, 8, c.

60. Burns' Ann. St. (Ind.) 1914, §1996 (prosecuting attorney shall approve affidavit, which takes place of information under present statute, by indorsement, using the words "approved by me"); Robinson v. State, 177 Ind. 263, 97 N. E. 929; Cole v. State, 169 Ind. 393, 82 N. E. 796.

[a] An omission in this respect (1) is fatal on a motion to quash (Robinson v. State, 177 Ind. 263, 97 N. E. 929; Cole v. State, 169 Ind. 393, 82 N. E. 796), (2) though not when objection thereto is taken for the first time in a court of review. Robinson v. State, 177 Ind. 263, 97 N. E. 929.

Review.—It will not be presumed that the indorsement of the character of the offense in connection with the word "information," was prejudicial to the accused when such indorsement aptly summarized the facts stated within the information and the attention of the trial court had been in no way directed to the indorsement complained of. Fager v. State, 49 Neb. 439, 68 N. W. 611.

State*, 28 Ohio St. 669, wherein the court said: "This is required, as to indictments, by section 83 of the criminal code, but we do know that it is necessary in regard to informations. In case of indictments, it is desirable to have the prosecuting witness indorse, so as to make him responsible for costs. This prevents frivolous prosecutions. defendant,⁷⁰ and such statutes being mandatory in some,⁷¹ though not all states,⁷² it is the duty of the district attorney to comply therewith,⁷³ a failure in this respect being fatal to the information, where timely objection is made.⁷⁴

72. State v. Tassell, 87 Kan. 861, 126 Pac. 1090 (the requirement is not so mandatory or essential that non-compliance with it necessarily invalidates the information or defeats the prosecution); Boulter v. State, 6 Wyo. 66, 76, 42 Pac. 606, holding that the qualifying language of the statute, which provides that the failure to indorse the names of the witnesses shall not be ground for quashing or setting aside the information, "neutralize the mandatory language of the portion requiring the indorsement, and are a legislative construction that the matter of indorsement of the names of the witnesses is directory instead of mandatory."

73. Wickham v. People, 41 Colo. 345, 93 Pac. 478; State v. Jeffries, 210 Mo. 302, 322, 109 S. W. 614.

[a] It is no sufficient excuse for not doing so (1) that the whereabouts of the witness is not known, or that the prosecutor does not know that he can secure his attendance (People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37, 41, 42 N. W. 604), (2) unless the witness is where the prosecution cannot compel attendance, as in another state. People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184, 40 N. W. 425, holding in latter case that it is not an absolute requirement that indorsement of known witnesses be made.

[b] Even though the statute is not considered as mandatory, "it is the duty of the county attorney, of course, to make the indorsement, so that the defendant may make inquiry concerning the standing and credibility of the witnesses who are to testify against him." State v. Tassell, 87 Kan. 861, 126 Pac. 1090.

[c] Presumption.—Where names are indorsed it is to be presumed that the prosecuting officer has done his duty, and will call no others. People v. Lilly, 1 Mich. N. P. 239.

74. State v. Martin, 230 Mo. 680, 688,

Such provisions do not require the indorsement of the names of witnesses that are called for the purpose of rebutting the testimony given on behalf of the defendant, however.⁷⁵ Nor is a dying declaration within the provisions of the statutes.⁷⁶

(II.) Time of Making.—Statutes requiring the indorsement contemplate that it be made, so far as the witnesses are known to the prosecuting officer, at the time of filing the information.⁷⁷ It has been determined, however, that the court is vested with discretion to allow the indorsement after the information has been filed,⁷⁸ and even during the trial,⁷⁹ and that unless there is an abuse of that discretion the defendant has no cause to complain.⁸⁰ The rule in some states is

[a] Where the name of the complaining witness (1) is omitted through inadvertence, the court may, in its discretion, allow such name to be indorsed even after the jury is sworn. People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473. (2) In permitting such indorsement, however, the court is bound to take care of the rights of the accused, and if reasonable claim is made that he is not prepared to meet the testimony expected by such witness, the court should grant a continuance. People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473.

80. State v. Tassell, 87 Kan. 861, 126 Pac. 1090.

[a] There was no abuse of discretion in the following cases: State v. Tassell, 87 Kan. 861, 126 Pac. 1090 (where several days before the trial and without leave of court the county attorney indorsed the names of the witnesses, it was not error for the court to allow him to reindorse such names on the day of the trial); State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 903 (where omission was not in bad faith, not erroneous to permit indorsement on day before trial).

[b] The discretion vested in the that such indorsement must be made before the trial, however.⁸¹

(III.) Names of Additional Witnesses.—(A.) BEFORE TRIAL.—The duty of the prosecuting officer is fully performed, when he has, at the time of presenting the charge for filing, indorsed the names of all witnesses then known to him, where there is no command that, if thereafter other witnesses are discovered, their names shall also be indorsed.⁸² Statutes, however, expressly provide that at such time before trial, as the court may rule or otherwise prescribe, the prosecuting attorney shall indorse the names of such other witnesses as shall then be known to him.⁸³

court should, of course, be cautiously exercised, and to that end should require the county attorney to act with good faith and not permit the bringing in of important witnesses without the defendant having an opportunity to make due inquiry into their standing and credibility. State v. Tassell, 87 Kan. 861, 126 Pac. 1090.

81. Kastner v. State, 58 Neb. 767, 777, 79 N. W. 713; Parks v. State, 20 Neb. 515, 31 N. W. 5.

[a] But it was no ground for exception that the name of a witness known to the prosecuting officer at the time of filing the information was indorsed after the trial had begun, where there was no showing of prejudice, and no postponement of the trial asked. This was necessary if the accused were prejudiced or surprised by the action of the court in permitting the indorsement to be made. Kemplin v. State, 90 Neb. 655, 134 N. W. 275, distinguishing Wilson v. State, 87 Neb. 638, 128 N. W. 38, the court saying: "In that case the county attorney was permitted to indorse ten names of witnesses after the case was called for trial. It was a capital case. The fact of that number of witnesses being indorsed at the moment of calling a case for trial would of itself raise a presumption of prejudice and a possible lack of fair dealing, and the granting of 24 hours of time in which to investigate as to the facts to be proved would be little less than mockery."

82. State v. Schnepel, 23 Mont. 523, 59 Pac. 927.

[a] In Montana, the statute does not provide for the indorsement of witnesses after the filing of the information. Nevertheless, it is held that an indorsement at commencement of trial of a witness not previously known to the prosecuting officer is properly allowed by the court. State v. Biggs, 45 Mont. 400, 123 Pac. 410.

[a] South Dakota.—(1) Previous to revision of Crim. Proc. Act in 1903, the statutes contained a similar provision. State v. King, 9 S. D. 628, 70 N. W. 1046. (2) Names could be added only under a general rule or special order of court. State v. King, 9 S. D. 628, 70 N. W. 1046. (3) They could not

Under these statutes, an indorsement after the filing of the information and before the trial is a matter within the discretion of the court, and does not constitute error unless there is an abuse of such discretion.⁸⁴ The indorsement should be made at as early a date as be added after the trial began, because, if they were previously known, they should have been previously indorsed, and, if not, it was unnecessary. State v. King, 9 S. D. 623, 70 N. W. 1046.

[b] New Information Unnecessary. Where new names are added to the information, it is not necessary that the accused be served with a new copy thereof. Notice of the addition of new names of witnesses meets every reasonable requirement. State v. Nordstrom, 7 Wash. 506, 35 Pac. 382.

Reno*, 41 Kan. 674, 21 Pac. 803. Mich.—People v. Luders, 126 Mich. 440, 85 N. W. 1081, at the trial, before jury sworn. Neb.—Johns v. State, 88 Neb. 145, 129 N. W. 247; Barney v. Lee Doon, 7 Wash. 308, 34 Pac. 1103.

[a] The court did not abuse its discretion, under the circumstances indicated in the following cases: Colo. Wickham v. People, 41 Colo. 345, 93 Pac. 478, not reversible error to allow, on the day before the case was set for trial, the district attorney to indorse upon the information the names of additional witnesses said to have been known to him when the information was filed, where defendant did not apply for a continuance nor make a showing of surprise or prejudice. Idaho.—State v. Rooke, 10 Idaho 388, 70 Pac. 82, where it satisfactorily appeared to the court that the prosecuting officer could not reasonably have asked such permission at an earlier time, not error to allow indorsement at beginning of trial. Kan.—State v. Hargis, 85 Kan. 873, 118 Pac. 699 (where indorsement made two days before the trial); State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 37 Pac. 174, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322 (where attention of defendant was called to witnesses, and inquiry had been made of some of them as to what their testimony would be); State v. Sorter, 52 Kan. 531, 34 Pac. 1036 (where sufficient time was given by court for accused to make inquiry regarding character and credibility of the proposed witnesses before the introduction of any evidence in the case). Mich.—People v. Gregory, 130 Mich. 522, 90 N. W. 414, not error to permit indorsement on day of trial and before jury sworn, where prosecuting officer gave notice to defendant's attorneys immediately upon receiving information that witnesses were essential, which was eight days before the trial. Mo.—State v. Wilson, 223 Mo. 173, 122 S. W. 671, where defendant made no complaint that he was taken by surprise by reason of the additional indorsement. Wash. State v. Le Doon, 7 Wash. 308, 34 Pac. 1103, in the absence of a rule of court prescribing time for indorsement, court does not err in allowing same during the impaneling of the jury, as the trial does not commence until the jury has been accepted and sworn.

[b] The accused is not prejudiced by the allowance of the indorsement of the names of additional witnesses, testifying to matters brought out in the preliminary examination by witnesses whose knowledge was only gained through hearsay, even though such indorsement is made but a short time before the trial. People v. Segal, 179 Mich. 316, 146 N. W. 644, wherein it was contended that since the prosecuting officer knew from the preliminary examination that he would have to have additional witnesses, he should have endeavored to learn the names thereof earlier than he did.

practicable after the discovery of such witnesses,⁸⁵ and before the commencement of the trial.⁸⁶

[c] Where Witnesses Not Called.

An accused is not prejudiced by the indorsement of several witnesses after the information has been filed, where the only one of such witnesses sworn on the trial is one because of whose absence he moved for a continuance. People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27, 63 N. W. 986.

[d] Court Reporter and Witness in Rebuttal.

Permission to indorse upon an information, when a case was called for trial, the name of the court reporter, who merely testified to the correctness of his report of the testimony of witnesses given at a former trial, and the name of another witness whose testimony was given in rebuttal, was within the proper discretion of the court. State v. Jackett, 85 Kan. 427, 116 Pac. 509.

[e] Notwithstanding a general rule of court requiring such names to be indorsed within twenty-four hours after their discovery, a judgment will not be reversed where the application to indorse the names was not made until a later time, provided no prejudice to the accused resulted. Barney v. State, 49 Neb. 515, 68 N. W. 636, wherein the court said: "A rule of court which would arbitrarily forbid the indorsement of names of witnesses essential to the state, under circumstances not prejudicing the rights of the accused, and thereby defeating a just administration of the criminal law, would be unreasonable and more honored in the breach than the observance."

[f] Under a rule of court, adopted pursuant to such statutory authority, and providing that the prosecuting attorney may at any time before the trial indorse on the information the names of such witnesses as shall then for the first time become known to him, upon his filing with the clerk of the court his affidavit setting forth that the materiality of such witnesses' testimony has just come to his knowledge and that they were not known to him to be material witnesses at the time of filing the information, no prejudice was shown, where in accordance with this rule, the county attorney filed the necessary affidavit to entitle him to indorse the name of a witness upon the information, to which the attention of the attorney for the defense was called, and indorsed the name of such witnesses, who were permitted to testify over the objections of defendant. Trimble v. State, 61 Neb. 604, 85 N. W. 844, holding that "If defendants were taken by surprise by the indorsement of said name, they should have asked for a postponement of the trial."

[g] If the accused does not request a postponement of the trial, no prejudice will be presumed because of such indorsement. Johns v. State, 88 Neb. 145, 129 N. W. 247. See also State v. Miller, 80 Wash. 75, 141 Pac. 293; State v. Holedger, 15 Wash. 443, 46 Pac. 652.

85. Idaho.—State v. Allen, 20 Idaho 263, 275, 117 Pac. 849. Neb.—Wilson v. State, 87 Neb. 638, 128 N. W. 38; Gandy v. State, 24 Neb. 716, 40 N. W. 302. Okla.—Hawkins v. State, 6 Okla. Crim. 308, 116 Pac. 607.

86. People v. O'Hare, 2 Mich. N. P. 170; Wilson v. State, 87 Neb. 638, 128 N. W. 38; Sweeney v. State, 59 Neb. 269, 80 N. W. 815 (error to permit indorsement after trial has commenced); Gandy v. State, 24 Neb. 716, 40 N. W. 302 (before day of trial); Stevens v. State, 19 Neb. 647, 28 N. W. 304. And see generally the statutes cited, supra, note 83.

[a] The carelessness or neglect of the prosecuting attorney will not warrant the court in permitting names to be indorsed upon the trial when the witnesses were before known to him. People v. Howes, 81 Mich. 396, 45 N. W. 961.

[b] Prosecutor Not Permitted To Spring Premeditated Surprise.—The court ought to require the utmost good faith of the prosecuting officer, and not permit him purposely to spring a surprise upon the accused by indorsing on the information during the trial the names of witnesses whom he intended beforehand to call in chief. State v. McDonald, 57 Kan. 537, 46 Pac. 966.

The trial court should require a strong showing at the time the application is made why the name or names were not indorsed at the time the information was filed,⁸⁷ or why application was not sooner made after such information was filed.⁸⁸

(B.) AFTER COMMENCEMENT OF TRIAL.—The statutes are silent as to what shall be done in case any witnesses are discovered after the commencement of the trial.⁸⁹ Nevertheless, the general rule has been adopted that if, after the trial has begun, the prosecuting officer learns of other witnesses whom he did not know of before, upon a proper showing of that fact made to the court,⁹⁰ leave to indorse such

87. State v. Allen, 20 Idaho 263, 117 Pac. 849; State v. Crea, 10 Idaho 88, 76 Pac. 1013 (by affidavit or otherwise); Gandy v. State, 27 Neb. 707, 733, 43 N. W. 747, 44 N. W. 108.

[a] In cases where new witnesses become known to counsel, or are ascertained to be necessary after the information has been filed, with such witnesses indorsed thereon as were known to him at the time of filing, it is only necessary that he make such a showing of the facts as will bring to the knowledge of the court that the prosecutor has acted in good faith and that the additional witnesses are necessary for the due presentation of the case. Parks v. State, 20 Neb. 515, 31 N. W. 5.

[b] If good cause be shown by the prosecuting officer why such indorsement was not made in accordance with the statute, and it appears that the failure to indorse the witness' name upon the information has in no way prejudiced or misled the defendant, then in such case the defendant can in no way be injured, and none of his rights will be denied by permitting the name of a witness to be indorsed after the information is filed. State v. Allen, 20 Idaho 263, 117 Pac. 849.

[c] A showing supporting a motion for permission to indorse a name upon the information after the information is filed and the trial begun, which shows that the witness whose name the prosecution asks to have indorsed upon the information was a witness at the preliminary examination, and that the defendant knew that such witness was an important and material witness for the prosecution, and the only reason why such name was not indorsed was the oversight and neglect of the prosecuting attorney, and no showing is made on behalf of the defendant to the effect that such defendant was in any way misled or deceived by the failure to indorse such name on the information, and that the court offered to grant a continuance giving the defendant time to secure necessary and material evidence made necessary by such indorsement, is sufficient to warrant the court in permitting such name to be indorsed upon the information. State v. Allen, 20 Idaho 263, 117 Pac. 849.

[d] No showing seems to be necessary where the indorsement is made without objection on the part of the accused. People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692, 77 N. W. 248.

88. State v. Allen, 20 Idaho 263, 117 Pac. 849.

89. People v. O'Hare, 2 Mich. N. P. 170; State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889. And see the statutes.

90. Idaho.—State v. Wilmbus, 8 Idaho 608, 70 Pac. 849. Mich.—People v. Bollman, 178 Mich. 159, 144 N. W. 537; People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211, 70 N. W. 431; People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482, 12 N. W. 665, 42 Am. Rep. 477. Okla.—Hawkins v. State, 6 Okla. Crim. 308, 118 Pac. 607; Steen v. State, 4 Okla. Crim. 309, 111 Pac. 1097.

[a] Without some excuse for delay the prosecuting attorney is not entitled to and should not be permitted to indorse a new witness' name on the information during the trial. People v. Karamol, 173 Mich. 354, 139 N. W. 1.

[b] But it is not reversible error to allow such indorsement without showing that the witnesses were unknown to the prosecuting officer before, where no continuance was asked by the accused. State v. La Pitre, 54 Wash. 166, 103 Pac. 27.

[c] The statement of the prosecutor at the trial that he had just been informed that morning of a material names, even while the trial is in progress, may be granted by the court in the exercise of its discretion,⁹¹ and the defendant cannot complain, where no abuse of such discretion is shown.⁹² The indorse-witness, whose name he sought to have indorsed, was a sufficient showing as against a general objection of the accused's counsel. People v. Bollman, 178 Mich. 159, 144 N. W. 537, holding that in the absence of a specific objection that the showing made by the prosecution was insufficient, because not made under oath, such contention would not be considered, on writ of error, no claim having been made by accused to the trial court that he was surprised in any way, nor that he wanted time to investigate the witness; nor complaint made that he was prejudiced in any way by the testimony of the witness.

[d] Correcting Name of Witness.

(1) The prosecuting officer may be permitted to correct an error made in indorsing name of a witness where there is no showing that it misled or prejudiced defendant. State v. McGann, 8 Idaho 40, 66 Pac. 823. (2) But he should be required to show that he was not aware of the mistake until time of asking leave to correct. Binkley v. State, 34 Neb. 757, 52 N. W. 708. (3) And if the accused was misled by such mistake, the court should grant a continuance. Binkley v. State, 34 Neb. 757, 52 N. W. 708.

91. See the following cases: Idaho. State v. Wilmbusse, 8 Idaho 608, 70 Pac. 849. Kan.—State v. Price, 55 Kan. 606, 40 Pac. 1000; State v. Taylor, 36 Kan. 329, 336, 13 Pac. 550; State v. McKinney, 31 Kan. 570, 3 Pac. 356. Mich.—People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819. Mont.—State v. Pepoon, 62 Wash. 635, 645, 114 Pac. 449; State v. Quinn, 56 Wash. 295, 105 Pac. 818; State v. La Pitre, 54 Wash. 166, 103 Pac. 27; State v. Kelley, 14 Wash. 702, 45 Pac. 38; State v. Boken, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889; State v. Regan, 8 Wash. 506, 36 Pac. 472.

And see generally the cases cited in the preceding note.

92. See the following: Kan.—State

v. Price, 55 Kan. 606, 40 Pac. 1000. Mich.—People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211, 70 N. W. 431 (where proper showing made); People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 400, 59 N. W. 664. Wash.—State v. Pepoon, 62 Wash. 635, 645, 114 Pac. 449; State v. Quinn, 56 Wash. 295, 105 Pac. 818.

[a] Reason.—(1) Such witnesses may be called and examined at the trial whether their names have been indorsed or not. See 3 ENCY. OF EV. 241, et seq. (2) The defendant, therefore, cannot complain if the county attorney indorses their names under the directions of the court, thus giving formal notice of the intention to call them, when no such notice is required. State v. Schnepel, 23 Mont. 523, 59 Pac. 927.

[b] There was no such abuse of discretion in the following cases: Kan. State v. Price, 55 Kan. 606, 40 Pac. 1000 (wherein names of witnesses were stated in information, which was actual notice to defendant that they were witnesses in the case); State v. Taylor, 36 Kan. 329, 336, 13 Pac. 550 (court would not say allowance of indorsement of seventeen additional witnesses an abuse of discretion by trial court, where record did not show what the testimony of the witnesses was, or that it was in any way prejudicial to the defendant). Mich.—People v. Moore, 155 Mich. 107, 119 N. W. 918 (where prosecuting attorney asked leave within two hours after he was apprised of the witness and his testimony, and the court announced that the case would not be concluded until the following day if the accused desired to investigate the witness); People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819 (where affidavit showing materiality of witness filed thirteen days before trial); People v. Howes, 81 Mich. 396, 45 N. W. 961 (where accused's counsel waived any further showing than statement of prosecutor that he had just learned witnesses material). Wash.—State v. Gray, 61 Wash. 549, 112 Pac. 641, where defendant asked either a continuance or a subpoena for additional witnesses, and court

ment in such case should be made as soon as the witnesses are discovered.⁹³

(C.) CONTINUANCE OR POSTPONEMENT.—If, upon the indorsement of additional witnesses, whether before or during the trial, the accused will in any way be prejudiced by proceeding with the trial, the court should allow a continuance or postponement upon application therefor.⁹⁴

(IV.) Sufficiency of Indorsement.—The names of the witnesses should be correctly given.⁹⁵ The indorsement of the surname and the initials of the Christian or given name of a witness is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the statute, however.⁹⁶

authorized issuance of subpoena and all the witnesses so called appeared in time to testify.

94. See the following cases: Idaho. State v. Allen, 20 Idaho 263, 275, 117 Pac. 849. Kan.—State v. McDonald, 57 Kan. 537, 46 Pac. 966, where leave to indorse witnesses known to prosecuting officer before trial is granted during trial, it ought to be upon terms as to postponement if requested by the accused. Mich.—People v. Price, 74 Mich. 37, 41 N. W. 853, where witness known to prosecutor at time of filing information allowed to be indorsed upon trial, error to refuse a continuance. Okla.—Cahn v. State, 10 Okla. Crim. 200, 135 Pac. 1155; Star v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. 210, 131 Pac. 542; Ford v. State, 5 Okla. Crim. 240, 114 Pac. 273. Wash.—State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889.

[a] A continuance is not allowable as a matter of right, where no showing is made of prejudice to defendant's rights. State v. Carpenter, 56 Wash. 670, 106 Pac. 206.

[b] The indorsement of the name of a court reporter who merely testified to the correctness of his report of testimony taken at a former trial, and the name of another witness whose testimony was given in rebuttal afforded no ground for a continuance. State v. Jakkett, 85 Kan. 427, 116 Pac. 509.

[c] Where accused does not seek a continuance on the ground that certain witnesses are not indorsed on the information before trial, it will be presumed that he considered himself ready for trial, and was not injured by want of notice of them. State v. Townsend, 7 Wash. 462, 35 Pac. 367.

95. Binkley v. State, 34 Neb. 757, 52 N. W. 708

[a] Married Woman.—It is allowable, though probably not the best practice, to indorse the name of a married woman on the information as a prospective witness in a criminal case by the use of her husband's surname and prefixed thereto the appellative abbreviation "Mrs." and the Christian name or names of her husband, or the initial letter or letters thereof. Carrall v. State, 53 Neb. 431, 73 N. W. 939.

[b] The law does not recognize other than the one or first Christian name, but where a person as a matter of fact has a second or middle Christian name and is commonly known or identified by the use of such middle Christian designation, if his wife's purposed use as a witness in a criminal cause is evidenced by an indorsement of her husband's surname and the abbreviation "Mrs." together with the middle Christian appellation of the husband, it is sufficient where it does not appear or there is no complaint that the accused person was misled thereby or lacked information of what person was to be produced as a witness. Carrall v. State, 53 Neb. 431, 73 N. W. 939.

[c] A misnomer does not require the exclusion of the testimony, when the defendant is not thereby surprised or prejudiced, however. 3 ENCY. OF EV. 242.

questions of the competency of witnesses not indorsed, and of compelling the calling of witnesses whose names are indorsed,⁹⁸ will be found in another work.

C. COMPLAINT OR INFORMATION IN JUSTICE OR POLICE COURTS.⁹⁹

1. In General.—The complaint upon which prosecutions for minor offenses are founded must be in writing in some,¹ but not all, states.² Where in writing, it may sufficiently show that the offense charged therein was committed within the state, without any caption, or venue in the margin.³ It should be addressed to the proper court or magistrate, however,⁴ and if made by a grand juror, addressed by him under

98. See the title "Witnesses," 14 ENCY. OF EV. 568.

99. As to formal requisites of indictment, see supra, VIII, A; of information, see supra, VIII, B; of preliminary complaint or affidavit upon which information is based, see supra, V.

1. State v. Quigg, 13 N. J. L. 293; State v. Walker, 9 S. D. 438, 69 N. W. 586. See also Kan.—Prell v. McDonald, 7 Kan. 226, 450. Me.—Campbell v. Thompson, 16 Me. 117. Miss.—Wilecox v. Williamson, 61 Miss. 310.

[a] In some states, a verbal or oral complaint is first made, whereupon the justice examines the complainant on oath, and other witnesses produced by him, if he produces any, and he then reduces the complaint to writing and causes it to be subscribed by the complainant. See generally the statutes, and Com. v. De Voe, 159 Mass. 101, 34 N. E. 85; State v. Davie, 62 Wis. 305, 22 N. W. 411.

2. Village of Oran v. Bles, 52 Mo. App. 509, under Rev. St., 1889, §1685, complaint made by marshal need not be in writing if defendant was present in court and in custody. See also Hobbs v. Hill, 157 Mass. 556, 32 N. E. 862.

[a] Statutes do not prescribe a form of complaint in Vermont. State v. Freeman, 59 Vt. 661, 10 Atl. 752.

3. A complaint, made "in behalf of the Commonwealth," and alleging an offense in a particular city and county, corresponding in name to a city and county of the commonwealth, against a statute, the title and date of which are stated, and rightly describing a statute passed by the legislature of the state, sufficiently shows that the offense was committed within the state, without any caption, or venue in the margin. Com. v. Quin, 5 Gray (Mass.) 478.

[a] The office of the venue in a complaint is to name the place where the alleged offense was committed, and to show that the court before whom the information is laid has jurisdiction to proceed. It is not an error fatal to the jurisdiction of the court to recite these matters in the English language, and no particular form of words is indispensably requisite for that purpose. Seay v. Shrader, 69 Neb. 249, 95 N. W. 690, wherein it was contended that the complaint was insufficient to confer jurisdiction because the charging part was not preceded by the words, "State of Nebraska, Otoe County—ss."

4. The court to which the complaint was addressed was sufficiently described in the following cases: Com. v. Baker, 155 Mass. 287, 29 N. E. 512; Com. v. Hoar, 121 Mass. 375; State v. Soragan, 40 Vt. 450 (wherein it was directed to A. B., "Recorder of the City of Burlington within and for the county of Chittenden," and it was objected that there was no such officer as recorder for the county of Chittenden, that these words were descriptive of the office and a misdescription, vitiating the complaint. The court said: "But the words, 'recorder of the city of Burlington,' constitute a perfect and sufficiently accurate description; and if the words, 'within and for the county of Chittenden,' can be rejected as nugatory, and treated as surplusage, it obviates this objection. We think as there is a previous perfect description of the office, inasmuch as there is no such officer as recorder of the county, the words which purport to give the officer named the territorial jurisdiction of the county may be rejected as the false description, leaving the true description to have its legitimate effect").

Commencement.—Under a constitutional requirement that all "prosecutions" must be carried on in the name and by authority of the state, it must so commence.⁶

2. Conclusion.—It need not conclude, as required of an indictment or information for a felony,⁷ against the peace and dignity of the state,⁸ or contrary to the statute,⁹ though upon this proposition the complaint was addressed "To the Justice of the Police Court of Chelsea." There was a special justice sitting at the time. Such address was nevertheless sufficient. The court said: "There is nowhere any requirement that it should be otherwise addressed, and this form was sufficient and proper, even though a special justice was sitting at the time when it was actually laid before him."

[b] It is not necessary that the caption or address should state the reason for the sitting of the special justice in the place of the regular one; it is sufficient that such be set out in the record. Com. v. De Voe, 159 Mass. 101, 34 N. E. 85.

[c] Where it appears that the complaint was in fact made to the proper justice and received by him, the fact that it is addressed to one who had previously been justice is not fatal, since the latter name may be treated as surplusage. State v. Wright, 16 R. I. 518, 17 Atl. 998.

6. Ex parte Jackson (Tex. Crim.), 96 S. W. 924, distinguishing Johnson v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 464, 20 S. W. 980; Jefferson v. State, 24 Tex. App. 535, 7 S. W. 244, holding that the constitutional requirement does not apply in a prosecution of a misdemeanor, upon the ground that the complaint in such cases was merely the basis for the information, and the information commenced with the language contained in the constitution. And see City of Brownsville v. Cook, 4 Neb. 101, holding under a similar constitutional provision that a prosecution for the violation of a city ordinance should run in the name of "The People of the State of Nebraska," and not in the name of the city.

[a] Reason.—A trial on a criminal charge by complaint before a justice of the peace for an offense cognizable by him is a prosecution for an offense prescribed by statute. Ex parte Fagg, 38 Tex. Crim. 573, 44 S. W. 294, 40 L. R. A. 212.

[b] Where an information in justice court recited that A. B., prosecuting attorney within and for the county of B., in the state of Missouri, it was held that it was not subject to the objection that it did not run in the name of the state, the words, county of B., being mere surplusage. State v. Murphy, 49 Mo. App. 270.

8. Ala.—Simpson v. State, 111 Ala. 6, 20 So. 572; Thomas v. State, 107 Ala. 61, 17 So. 941 (omission to conclude against peace and dignity of state does not render complaint insufficient). Ky.—Com. v. Clark, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 301. Ohio.—Fendrick v. State, 9 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 49, 18 Ohio Cir. Dec. 724, reversing 17 Ohio Dec. (N. P.) 73, affirmed, 77 Ohio St. 298, 82 N. E. 1078. Tex.—Curry v. State (Tex. Crim.), 24 S. [a] A grand juror's complaint for a misdemeanor need not conclude contra pacem. State v. Miller, 24 Conn. 519, cited with approval in State v. Holmes, 26 Conn. 230.

9. Cal.—Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 400, 408, 39 Pac. 775. Ga.—Downing v. State, 66 Ga. 160, not demurrable because it does not conclude contra formam statuti. Minn.—State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 502, 95 N. W. 449, not necessary to conclude "contrary to the statute."

See also State v. Brown, 14 S. C. 380.

[a] The omission of conclusion contra formam from a grand juror's complaint is not fatal where the offense charged is a common-law offense. State v. Holmes, 28 Conn. 230.

[b] "The only purpose of such a contrary rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions.¹⁰

Where necessary to conclude "contra formam," it is unnecessary to set forth the date of the statute,¹¹ or otherwise describe it.¹²

3. Signature.—The statutes require that the name of the party making the complaint must be signed at the foot thereof.¹³ A signature in a blank space in the body of the complaint is not a sufficient compliance with such a statute.¹⁴ Nor is it necessary that the name of the complainant be set out in the body of the complaint, where his signature is appended thereto;¹⁵ or to add the title of an officer, concluding clause in an indictment or criminal complaint is to show that the prosecution is based upon a statute, and not upon a common-law offense; and since the repeal of all common-law offenses in this state (Gen. St., 1894, §6286) it is functionless, except in cases where the same acts are declared to be an offense and punishable both by statute and by a municipal ordinance. In such cases the indictment or the complaint ought to conclude contrary to the statute or the ordinance, as the case may be, so that the defendant may be advised under which the prosecution is brought, as all criminal cases are properly prosecuted in the name of the state." State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 502, 95 N. W. 449.

10. Com. v. Gay, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 44; Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 462, 475; State v. Bacon, 40 Vt. 456; State v. Soragan, 40 Vt. 450. And see Miller v. State, 81 Miss. 162, 32 So. 951, citing State v. Morgan, 79 Miss. 659, 31 So. 338; Love v. State (Miss.), 8 So. 465.

[a] In North Carolina, (1) it has been held that the regularity required in indictments cannot be dispensed with in justice's warrants, and therefore, during the time it was necessary for every indictment founded upon a statute to conclude against the statute, it was required that a justice's warrant should so conclude. State v. Lowder, 85 N. C. 564; State v. Luther, 77 N. C. 492; State v. Muse, 20 N. C. 463. (2) It is doubtful whether such formality would now be required, it having been held unnecessary for indictments to so conclude. See supra, VIII, A, 6, c.

11. Com. v. Keefe, 7 Gray (Mass.) 332.

[a] A complaint, which charges the commission of an offense on a certain day "contrary to the forms of the statutes in such cases made and provided" is good, after verdict, although a statute for the punishment of such offenses, which took effect before the day specified, and repealed an earlier statute imposing different penalties for like offenses, excepted from its operation offenses already committed. Com. v. Hitchings, 5 Gray. (Mass.) 482. And see Com. v. Keefe, 7 Gray (Mass.) 332.

12. Com. v. Keefe, 7 Gray (Mass.) 332.

[a] A complaint signed by the complainant's mark, and certified by the magistrate to whom it was addressed, is sufficient without an attesting witness to the mark. Com. v. Sullivan, 14 Gray (Mass.) 97.

14. Com. v. Barhight, 9 Gray (Mass.) 113.

15. See the following cases: Ia. State v. McKinley, 82 Iowa 445, 48 N. W. 804. Mass.—Com. v. Eagan, 103 Mass. 71, omission of complainant's name from the body of a complaint signed by him does not affect jurisdiction of court, and therefore objection cannot be taken advantage of in arrest of judgment. Tex.—Dunn v. State (Tex. Crim.), 158 S. W. 300; Malz v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 447, 34 S. W. 267, 37 S. W. 748; Curry v. State (Tex. Crim.), 24 S. W. 516.

[a] Variance Between Complaint and Signature.—It is, therefore, no ground for objection that there is a variance between the name stated in the body of the complaint and the one signed thereto. Dunn v. State (Tex. Crim.), 158 S. W. 300; Malz v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 447, 34 S. W. 267, 37 whose signature is appended thereto, when in the body of the complaint he describes himself as of a class entitled to make it.¹⁶

4. Verification.¹⁷—Where criminal prosecutions originate upon complaint, one made upon oath or affirmation is implied.¹⁸ Indeed, statutes sometimes require that the complaint shall be made on oath.¹⁹

S. W. 748. See also Woody v. State, 113 Ga. 927, 39 S. E. 297.

[b] Though there be a variance between the name of the complainant as it appears in the body of the complaint and as signed thereto, a certificate by the magistrate to whom it is addressed that it was "received and sworn to before said court" sufficiently shows that it was signed and sworn to by the complainant named in the body of the complaint. Com. v. Wallace, 14 Gray (Mass.) 382. And see Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 142 Mass. 470, 8 N. E. 421; Com. v. Quin, 5 Gray (Mass.) 478.

[c] Grand Juror's Complaint. Where the complaint was in the usual form, except that the grand juror's name was omitted from the body of the complaint, and appeared only at the end, by way of official signature thereto, it was sufficient, as it appeared to be addressed by a grand juror under his oath of office and official signature. State v. Davis, 52 Vt. 376.

But see O'Brien v. City of Cleveland, 1 Cleve. L. Rep. 100, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 189 (holding that information in police court for violation of city ordinance sufficient with signature of prosecuting officer); State v. Davie, 62 Wis. 305, 22 N. W. 411.

[a] In Michigan, an information filed by the prosecuting attorney in the recorder's court of the city of Detroit need not be verified, by express provision of statute. People v. Graney, 91 Mich. 646, 52 N. W. 66.

[b] Rule in Missouri.—(1) The statute requires that an information filed in the circuit court shall be verified by the prosecuting attorney, or supported by the affidavit of some other person. See supra, VIII, B, 8, a.

(2) The statute, in regard to filing informations before a justice of the peace, does not require a verification, and an information before a justice of the peace, signed and filed by the prosecuting attorney in his official capacity, is good without verification (State v. Webster, 206 Mo. 558, 570, 105 S. W. 705; State v. Rausberger, 106 Mo. 135, 145, 17 S. W. 290, s. c., 42 Mo. App. 466; State v. Simpson, 126 Mo. App. 169, 103 S. W. 592; *State v. App. 513), (4) though it is good if not accompanied by an affidavit. State v. O'Kelley, 121 Mo. App. 178, 98 S. W. 804. And see State v. Ostmann, 123 Mo. App. 114, 100 S. W. 696; *State v. [a] Omission Amendable Defect. In the absence of prescribed form by statute, or of specific statutory requirement that such oath shall be certified thereon before issuing a warrant, the omission constitutes but a formal defect, which is amendable. State v. Freeman, 59 Vt. 661, 10 Atl. 752.

[b] Reverification unnecessary where

Who May Take.²⁰ — The oath need not be administered by the justice who is to hear the case,²¹ though a complaint sworn to before him is sufficient;²² but may be taken before another officer authorized to administer oaths,²³ such as the clerk of his court,²⁴ or of another court,²⁵ or another justice,²⁶ or before a notary public.²⁷ Whether it may be taken by one acting in the dual capacity of notary public and prosecuting attorney is a disputed question.²⁸

A verification on information and belief, although made by the prosecuting officer, is not deemed sufficient in some states.²⁹ In other states, complaint is amended in unimportant particular. See State v. Redford, 32 Kan. 198, 4 Pac. 98.

[b] The mere identity of name appearing from the signature of the attesting officer and that of the person who signed the accusation as prosecuting attorney will not warrant the assumption, as matter of law, that the same individual acted not only as a notary public but also in the capacity of prosecuting attorney. Shuler v. State, 125 Ga. 778, 54 S. E. 689.

[a] The verification of a positive charge by an oath, according to the best knowledge and belief of the party, may be sufficient, upon inquiry into the circumstances, to satisfy the jus-

however, such a verification, especially where made by the prosecuting officer, is sufficient for nearly every purpose.³⁰

The Jurat.—The precision required in stating the offense in the complaint is not necessary in the jurat.³¹ Any form from which the tice that an offense has been committed, and it may therefore be sufficient to authorize him to issue his warrant. State v. Hobbs, 39 Me. 212, distinguishing Com. v. Phillips, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 211, on the ground that in that case the complaint alleged only, that there was "probable cause to suspect" the accused to be guilty.

[b] Where a party who has been arrested upon a warrant which the magistrate had no jurisdiction to issue demands and stands trial without raising the objection, he cannot be heard after conviction to claim that the court had no jurisdiction of his person. In re Blum, 9 Misc. 571, 30 N. Y. Supp. 396, application for discharge on habeas corpus after conviction.

[c] Positive Verification—Proof of Information and Belief.—Jurisdiction to issue a warrant, acquired by a duly verified complaint in writing, charging an offense in direct and positive terms, is not lost by proof upon the trial that the complainant had no knowledge of the commission of the offense, except upon information and belief. State v. Graffmuller, 26 Minn. 6, 46 N. W. 445. And see People v. Schottey, 66 Mich. 708, 33 N. W. 810.

[d] It has been held that a complaint, purporting to be made upon the knowledge of affiant cannot be impeached upon arraignment by showing a lack of knowledge on the part of the complaining witness. Potter v. Barry Circuit Judge, 156 Mich. 183, 120 N. W. 586, distinguishing People v. Heffron, 53 Mich. 527, 19 N. W. 170, for the reason that the complaint in that case on its face showed that the affidavit was not made upon the knowledge of the affiant.

30. See the following: Kan.—In re Lewis, 31 Kan. 71, 1 Pac. 283 (sufficient to support a conviction and sentence where trial without attack); State v. Tedger, 6 Kan. App. 762, 59 Pac. 985 (such verification by prosecuting officer sufficient for every purpose except to sustain a warrant, when properly attacked on that ground). Okla.—In re Cummings, 11 Okla. 286, 66 Pac. 332, sufficient for every purpose except merely the issuing of the warrant for the arrest of the defendant. Wis.—State v. Davie, 62 Wis. 305, 22 N. W. 411 (complaint sufficient though made upon information and belief); State v. Tall, 56 Wis. 577, 14 N. W. 596.

[a] Compare Mulkins v. United States, 10 Okla. 288, 61 Pac. 925, holding that "A verification, on information and belief, to a complaint in a criminal case is not sufficient to authorize a court to put the defendant upon trial for the offense charged therein. Such complaint should be sworn to positively, or the facts upon which the warrant should issue ought to be presented to the court by a positive affidavit, or by competent evidence."

[b] Where the complaint charges the accused in positive terms with the commission of the offense, the addition of the words that "the affiant verily believes the defendant is guilty of the facts charged," does not render the complaint invalid as not being sworn to positively. Brown v. State, 16 Neb. 658, 21 N. W. 454.

[c] Where the statute does not require that the source of the prosecuting attorney's information be made to appear, an information in justice's court is not invalid as against the objection that it is "not based upon the knowledge, information, or belief of the prosecuting attorney as contemplated by law." State v. Crider (Mo. App.), 168 S. W. 315.

31. Com. v. Keefe, 7 Gray (Mass.) 332.

(2) It has been held that the jurat would not be invalid if no date whatever were written in it. Ross v. State, 9 Ind. App. 35, 36 N. E. 167, holding also that a jurat in which the date is given as 189— will be considered on appeal as amended to show the correct date, and that the judge before whom the affidavit was made idea can be collected is sufficient,³² as "taken and sworn before me,"³³ or the like.³⁴ It need not certify the mode and manner in which the officer administered the oath or affirmation,³⁵ or where the complainant affirms, that he was conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath.³⁶

It is not necessary that the seal of the court, where the oath is taken before the justice, should be attached to the jurat.³⁷ Nor will the omission of the officer's signature to the jurat,³⁸ or of the officer to show his official title with his name in signing the jurat,³⁹ at the time might properly have amended it by supplying the omitted figure at any time before or during the trial.

34. A certificate that the complaint was "received, subscribed and sworn to" is sufficient. Com. v. Dillane, 11 Gray (Mass.) 67, following Com. v. Keefe, 7 Gray (Mass.) 332, holding "received and sworn to" sufficient.

[a] A certificate in the following words: "Subscribed and sworn to, etc.," is sufficient even on motion to quash without a formal commencement stating the name of an affiant and that he was sworn according to law. Lay v. State, 180 Ind. 1, 102 N. E. 274.

E. 156 (holding affidavit sworn to before a notary bad because there was no seal, upon the ground that holding therein was based upon a statute, which expressly declared "all notarial acts, not attested by such seal, shall be void," whereas as to the acts of the officer in this case, a police judge, in whose court the cause was to be tried, there is no such statute); Com. v. De Voe, 159 Mass. 101, 34 N. E. 85.

38. In People v. Lane, 124 Mich. 271, 82 N. W. 896, it was contended "that the justice had no jurisdiction to issue a warrant in the assault and battery case, or to try the case, because there was no sworn complaint as a basis therefor. It appears that the jurat to the complaint had not been signed by the justice. He testifies that he swore the complaining witness to the complaint. The complaining witness also testifies that he was sworn thereto. It is evident from the complaint that the justice examined the complaining witness on oath touching the matters referred to in the complaint. This is sufficient, under section 1020, 1 Comp. Laws 1897."

[a] The signature of the officer taking the oath is sufficient where his given name is designated by the abbreviation therefor. Com. v. Taber, 155 Mass. 5, 28 N. E. 1056.

39. City of Kingman v. Barry, 40 Kan. 625, 20 Pac. 527. In this case, the police judge before whom the complaint was sworn to signed the jurat attached to the same, but the name of his office was not included in the signature; but it appeared from the transcript of the case brought up to the district court, and upon which the appeal was founded, that the person who signed the jurat was the police judge of the city, and therefore the omission of the officer to couple the name of his office with his signature did not invalidate the complaint. The court said: "The mere fact that the officer fails to couple his official title with his name in signing a jurat, or to attach a jurat at all, to the affidavit at the time the oath is administered, will not invalidate it. The officer may attach a jurat or his official signature thereto at a later time, when the affithe oath is administered, or an error in showing the same,⁴⁰ invalidate the complaint.

Where the oath is taken by a special justice or by a clerk pro tem, it is not necessary that the jurat should state the reason for the sitting of the special justice,⁴¹ or the appointment of the clerk pro tem.⁴²

5. Indorsement of Names of Witnesses.⁴³ — In a criminal prosecution commenced before a justice of the peace, it is not necessary that the names of the witnesses should be indorsed⁴⁴ upon the complaint davit would be held sufficient. . . . In the present case, no objection was taken to the jurat during the trial, and if there had been it is shown by the record that the objection would have been unavailing. The transcript of the case brought up to the district court, and upon which the appeal was founded shows plainly enough that M. L. Mock was the acting police judge of the city of Kingman. Apart from this, the court could take judicial notice of the official character of Mock and of the tribunal over which he presided and from which the proceedings came."

40. A complaint, in a prosecution before a police judge, is not void because the letters "J. P." instead of "P. J." or the words "Police Judge," are attached to the name of the police judge where he signs the jurat attached thereto. City of Cherokee v. Fox, 34 Kan. 16, 7 Pac. 625.

[a] Sufficient Showings.—Where a statute provides that no one but a justice of the peace can be a trial justice, a signature as "trial justice" involves a signature as justice of the peace, and no separate designation of the inferior office is necessary. The signature as trial justice means that the signer is the legal holder of that office, that is, that he is a justice of the peace holding a commission as trial justice. Com. v. Mosher, 134 Mass. 226.

[b] A description "justice of the peace, authorized to issue warrants as aforesaid," refers back to the caption of the complaint, and is sufficient. Com. v. Taber, 155 Mass. 5, 28 N. E. 1056.

[c] The official character of the magistrate was sufficiently shown in Com. v. Lynn, 154 Mass. 405, 28 N. E. 289, by the complaint, which described him as "Special Justice of the District Court of Hampshire," and by the words "Special Justice" appended to his signature to the jurat.

41. Com. v. De Voe, 159 Mass. 101, 34 N. E. 85.

[a] A certificate of the clerk of a police court that a certain complaint was sworn to "before said court," is sufficient evidence that it was duly sworn to, without stating whether it was before the standing justice, or one of the special justices. Com. v. Wingate, 6 Gray (Mass.) 485.

42. Com. v. Connell, 9 Allen (Mass.) 488.

[a] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the party thus certifying is to be taken to have been appointed for sufficient cause. Com. v. Connell, 9 Allen (Mass.) 488.

43. As to indorsement of names of witnesses on indictment, see supra, VIII, A, 8, f; on information or accusation, see supra, VIII, B, 9, c.

[a] The provisions requiring such indorsement on an information or indictment are not applicable to a prosecution in a justice court. City of Topeka v. Briggs, 90 Kan. 843, 135 Pac. 1184. And see State v. Heinze, 45 Mo. App. 403.

[b] Grand Juror's Complaint.—The omission of such indorsement from a grand juror's complaint preferred to a police court was held not objectionable upon plea in abatement in State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290, citing Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467, wherein Judge Bennett, incidentally, and by way of analogy for illustration, said, the statute requiring the memorandum of names of witnesses to the presentment by town grand jurors, has always been held to be directory, and that when filed, nor even in the district court on appeal, unless the district court should so order.⁴⁵

IX. CHARGING THE OFFENSE. — A. CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS AS TO STATEMENT OF OFFENSE. — Not only the constitution of the United States,⁴⁶ but the constitutions of all the states,⁴⁷ provide an omission to annex the names to the complaint, was no cause for quashing the proceedings.

[c] Name of the prosecuting witness need not be indorsed on information for a misdemeanor filed before a justice of the peace. State v. Flowers, 56 Mo. App. 502.

[d] Manner of Taking Objection. (1) Even if required and omitted, the objection on that account cannot be raised by objection to the evidence. State v. Heinze, 45 Mo. App. 403. (2) It should be taken advantage of by motion to quash. State v. Heinze, 45 Mo. App. 403; State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. App. 513. (3) It cannot be taken by motion in arrest (State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. App. 513), (4) or by assignment of error on appeal, where objection made for first time thereby. State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. App. 513. As to objections generally, see infra, XIV.

[b] "The object of the constitutional guaranty is doubtless for the purpose of having the accused informed of the precise offense for which he must answer, and thus enable him to meet and defend against that particular accusation, when judicially called upon to do so. Speaking of the purpose of such constitutional provisions and guaranties it is observed by a well-known author on criminal jurisprudence: 'Standing beside the presumption that the defendant is innocent, they have compelled from the prosecuting power such a statement of the nature and cause of the accusation as would impart to him, who is supposed to know nothing of it outside of the written words, reasonable information of what he is to encounter at the trial; thus enabling him to collect his proofs, and avoid the injury of a surprise. Therefore the wisdom of the past—the rules which the common law has established for the indictment—should, as respects the substance of the accusation, be the chief guide to what this constitutional provision permits or forbids.' Bishop, New Criminal Procedure, sec. 110. The following authorities are also pertinent: People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431; Mott v. State, 29 Ark. 147; *Conner v. They entitle him to insist that the indictment or information shall apprise him of the offense charged with such reasonable certainty that he can make his defense and protect himself after judgment against another prosecution for the same offense.⁵¹ No more than this is generally required, however.⁵² provisions are substantially a redeclaration and affirmation of the ancient rule of the common law that no one shall be held to answer to an indictment or information unless the crime with which it is intended to charge him is set forth with precision and fullness, to the end that he may have opportunity to make his defense and avail himself of his conviction or acquittal in a subsequent prosecution for the same cause." *Fehringer v. May Legislature Dispense With Requirements of Indictment. — It is not in the power of the legislature to deprive an accused of the constitutional right to demand information of the nature of the crime with which he is charged.⁵³ It cannot dispense with a statement in the indictment or information of the essential elements of the offense charged against the accused,⁵⁴ but it can dispense with some of its technical formalities.⁵⁵

The constitutional right of the defendant is not infringed, however, by statutes dispensing with any allegation as to time, when it is not a material element of the offense,⁵⁶ or as to the place of the alleged acts,⁵⁷ or as to the manner or means by which the offense is comture and cause of the accusation against him, within the meaning of the constitutional provisions. Burton v. United States, 202 U. S. 344, 372, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 50 L. ed. 1057.

[a] "The argument (that such a statute is unconstitutional) is based on the assumption that 'nature and cause' are equivalent to 'mode or manner.' They are clearly distinct. The nature and cause of a criminal prosecution is sufficiently averred by charging the crime alleged to have been committed. This must be done. The mode or manner refers to the instrument, with which it was committed, or the specific agency used to accomplish the result. It is not necessary to aver either of these in the indictment. The 20th section of the act is, therefore, not in conflict with the organic law." Goersen v. Com., 99 Pa. 388, 398.

[b] As a rule, the means by which the offense is committed is no part thereof. It may be made so, however. State v. Verrill, 54 Me. 408, 414.

[c] "They are rather matters of evidence to establish the charge." Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383, 398.

As to averment of means generally, see infra, IX, E, 5, b.

[a] A statute, declaring that it shall be sufficient "to allege that the party accused did the act with intent to defraud, without alleging an intent to defraud any particular person or body corporate," etc., has been held constitutional. Turpin v. State, 19 Ohio St. 540.

[a] Describing Property by Words of General Description.—It may provide that the property, which is the subject of the crime, may be described by words of general description. Thus, a statute, providing that it shall be sufficient to describe "money, bills, notes or currency" simply as "money," has been held constitutional. Ill.—People v. Clark, 256 Ill. 14, 99 N. E. 866, 1913E, Ann. Cas. 214. Ind.—Randall v. State, 132 Ind. 539, 32 N. E. 305; Riggs v. State, 104 Ind. 261, 3 N. E. 886. See also Lewis v. State, 113 Ind. 59, 14 N. E. 892. Mass.—Com. v. Bennett, 118 Mass. 443. Mich.—People v. Hanaw, 107 Mich. 337, 65 N. W. 231 (last two cases holding that accused may have charge made certain by examination or bill of particulars); Brown v. People, 29 Mich. 232.

[b] There is a difference between dispensing with particularity of statement in describing the property, and dispensing with all statement in respect thereto. In the latter case, the statute would be unconstitutional. See State v. Silverman, 76 N. H. 309, 82 Atl. 536.

Statutes dispensing with the necessity of negating exceptions of any kind, are not in conflict with such constitutional provisions.⁶¹

B. STATUTORY FORMS.—Statutes in many states provide a general form of an indictment or information,⁶² as well as specific forms thereof for the various offenses.⁶³ It is quite competent for the legislature to

(2) The nature and character of the so called confidence game has become popularized in most of the cities and large towns, and even in the rural districts, and is so well understood as to sufficiently advise the defendant of what he is called upon to defend. Morton v. People, 47 Ill. 468.

[c] It is not necessary in order to inform the accused of the nature and cause of the accusation against him that an indictment which preserves the substance of the offense and pursues the form prescribed by the legislature, should descend to a minute detail of facts and circumstances, which, during the progress of the trial, would be requisite to be proved. State v. Fancher, 71 Mo. 460, wherein the court said: "In Nevada, it is held that an indictment is sufficient in pursuing the prescribed statutory form in the description of an offense, if the substance be preserved; and that, subject to that condition, the power of the legislature as to the fashion and form of an indictment is plenary. State v. O'Flaherty, 7 Nev. 153. Mr. Justice Cooley holds the same view, saying in effect that legislative forms of indictments are sufficient, if furnishing reasonable constitutional provision.⁶⁶ Indeed, the form in which the crime is to be charged and what shall constitute it are left to the legislature to prescribe.⁶⁷ It can prescribe a form which omits many averments that, at common law, were necessary,⁶⁸ or it can imperatively require information to the accused of the accusation preferred against him. Cooley's Const. Lin., 309, note."

Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559.

[a] The court said, in State v. Hosmer (Ore.), 142 Pac. 581: "Admittedly the fundamental law guarantees to a defendant the right to 'determine the nature and cause of the accusation against him;' and any form of indictment outlined by the legislature abridging this right would be violative of a sacred right vouchsafed by the constitution. However, we cannot concede that the section of the constitution referred to requires the lawmaking body to adopt a form of indictment embodying every phrase in the definition of a crime, but simply means that the form prescribed shall furnish the accused reasonable information of what he is called upon to answer, by setting forth sufficient of the elements of the offense to give it form and character. An indictment for larceny cannot, under a legislative enactment, be made an indictment for murder without violating the plain meaning of this provision of the constitution; but, if the indictment following the form prescribed by the legislature sets forth with reasonable certainty the crime for which the accused is to be tried, the mandate of the constitution is satisfied."

[b] Nor do constitutional provisions, requiring prosecutions to be by indictment or information, prevent the legislature from prescribing the forms thereof. Ala.—*Noles v. on account of their generality, the courts should require the indictment to conform in every substantial particular to the statutory form, when drawn thereunder.⁷⁴

Such statutes do not ordinarily require the use of these forms; they simply provide them, to be used if preferred.⁷⁵ An indictment for a common-law offense, good at common law, is still good under such statutes.⁷⁶ If the indictment is not framed in the form provided by the statute, however, it must aver every material constituent of the offense.⁷⁷

C. MANNER OF CHARGING. — 1. In General. — The same rules in reference to charging an offense in an indictment are also applicable to informations or affidavits,⁷⁸ by express provision of statute in some states.⁷⁹

2. Language, Spelling and Grammatical Errors and Omissions.

a. *In General.*⁸⁰ — The nicety and strictness in framing indictments, which was formerly required, is now considered excessive, and therefore has been much relaxed,⁸¹ statutes now declaring that the state-legislative direction that such indictment shall be sufficient is controlling. McCullough v. State, 63 Ala. 75; Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 55; Wilson v. State, 61 Ala. 151.

74. Ala. — Sanders v. State, 2 Ala. App. 13, 56 So. 69. Mo. — State v. Clay, 100 Mo. 571, 579, 13 S. W. 827, unless the statutory form is followed, the indictment is bad. Tex. — Thomas v. State, 18 Tex. App. 213, 221, all requisites, whether formal or substantial, should be complied with.

[a] Such forms are not applicable to prosecutions by affidavit or complaint in municipal courts, and need not be followed. They merely furnish a general outline as to how such accusations should be drawn. Flanders v. State, 9 Ga. App. 820, 72 S. E. 286.

Allegations sufficient for a common-law indictment for murder are sufficient for an information under the statute. State v. McGowan, 36 Mont. 422, 93 Pac. 552.

77. Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 55. See also Grattan v. State, 71 Ala. 344.

[a] This is the only safe rule to follow in such a case: for if the form provided is not followed, an indictment, though containing all the averments of fact which the form contains, but in different language and in different form, is not sufficient. Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 55.

It is true that by virtue of express provision of statute in some states, an indictment good at common law is still good under statutes punishing the same offense;⁹³ but such statutes do not apply where the grade of the common-law offense has been increased by the statute from a misdemeanor to a felony.⁹⁴

When the statute does not prescribe the form of indictment, or the words that shall be used, it is only necessary that it conform to the general rules of law applicable to such indictments, and be so plain and explicit that there cannot be any reasonable doubt as to its meaning.⁹⁵

Following Approved Precedents.—While the better rule in preparing indictments and informations is to follow approved precedents when it can be done,⁹⁶ they are not necessarily defective because they fail to do so,⁹⁷ but if they contain all necessary averments though couched in different language from approved forms and precedents, they will be held good.⁹⁸

[a] In State v. Holong, 38 Minn. 368, 37 N. W. 587, the court said, that the old form of pleading in criminal actions has been abolished, and the rules by which the sufficiency of such pleadings is to be determined, are those prescribed by the statute. That an indictment is sufficient if it can be understood therefrom that the act or omission charged as the crime is stated with such a degree of certainty as to enable the court to pronounce judgment upon conviction, according to the right of the case. That it was the intent of the legislature to free criminal pleading from the technical rules (many of which are senseless) which had grown up on the subject. That where the criminal character of the act is as strongly stated in the words used in the indictment as those given in the statute, they are the words used in the statute defining the offense, and mean as much in the indictment as in the statute, and in either they describe the offense.

b. English Language.—Statutes in some states expressly require that indictments shall, except technical terms, be in the English language.⁹⁹ Statutes, providing that an indictment or information must contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended,¹ also contemplate a pleading entirely in the English language.² And a constitutional provision, requiring judicial proceedings to be conducted, preserved, and published in no other than the English language, imperatively requires an indictment in such language.³

An omission of one or more letters in a word, which changes the word to one of another language of the same meaning as that intended to be used, is not fatal under such constitutional provisions, however.⁴ Nor does the use of the ordinary abbreviations or symbols, or numerals render it invalid because not in the English language.⁵

It would seem that matter in a foreign language, set up in an indictment or information, should be translated.⁶

c. Use of Technical Terms and Words.—The offense should be set forth in unambiguous words, not in slang words or vulgarisms, or words used in a technical sense in some particular employment or business, but in words belonging to the plain and proper language of the community.⁷ There were, of course, at the common law, certain and safer practice to follow approved precedents, and to adhere closely and precisely to the statutory description of offenses, nevertheless the indictment would be good, 'so the offense be certainly and substantially described therein,' although, there be absent from it words 'merely formal and technical.'

[a] In State v. Harris, 106 N. C. 682, 11 S. E. 377, the court said: "As to the omission of the words 'with force and arms,' sixty years ago Chief Justice Ruffin, in State v. Moses, 2 Dev. 452, said that those words have been 'superfluous since the Statute 37, Henry VIII.' We are as much bound to dispense with unnecessary and immaterial averments, when permitted by the statute, as if commanded by it, and if the one in question be not of that character, it is difficult to say to what 'unseemly nicety' (as Lord Hale calls it), 'formality or refinement the act can extend.' In State v. Duncan, 6 Fred. 236, which, like the case just cited was an indictment for murder, the court reiterates that the words 'force and arms' are mere-surplusage. The Statute 37, Henry VIII, was passed in the year 1546. It would seem that this point should be held as settled. The statute is set out in Whart. Cr. Pl. and Pr., §271, and the learned author says that even prior thereto these words were never necessary in a charge like this, where no actual force was used."

[b] In Vermont, (1) prior to a statutory provision upon the subject, the court had "adopted the distinction known in the English practice, under the statute 37th Henry VIII, cap. 8, that it is not necessary to insert these words where they may be fairly implied record,"¹¹ or "moved and instigated by the devil,"¹² or other words not essential to constitute the offense;¹³ and the same effect is obtained under statutory provisions for the cure of defects in matters of form.¹⁴

Where the offense is defined by statute, it is sufficient, as a rule, in charging the same, to follow the language of the statute,¹⁵ and technical words formerly used, if not found in the statute, need not be used in the indictment or information.¹⁶

d. Abbreviations, Numerals and Symbols.—It is now well settled that the use of Arabic numerals, instead of letters or words, as to dates and figures, does not vitiate an indictment or information,¹⁷ though it is undoubtedly not the best practice.¹⁸ Likewise, the use of well

The words vi et armis are implied in various expressions and words in this complaint. The word feloniously in itself sufficiently implies them."

The court said: "While there is a defect in the spelling, and in the construction, of the word formed by the letters and characters above referred to, that word evidently represents, and stands for, the word 'malice,' wherever it occurs in the indictment, and ought to be so read and construed. [a] Plural for Singular and Vice Versa.—(1) The use of the plural instead of the singular personal pronoun in an indictment against one person will not vitiate it. Jackson v. State, 88 Ga. 784, 15 S. E. 677; Snow v. State, 6 Tex. App. 284. (2) Likewise, the use of a singular personal pronoun, where the sense calls for a pronoun in the plural number, is not a fatal defect. Ga.—Dickson v. State, 62 Ga. 583, 589. N. J.—State v. Parks, 61 N. J. L. 438, 39 Atl. 1023. Tex. Hollins v. State (Tex. Crim.), 69 S. W. 594; Funderburk v. State (Tex. Crim.), 61 S. W. 393, use of singular "it" instead of plural "them" not objectionable in last two cases.

or rhetorical,³⁰ mistakes, or improper punctuation,³¹ will not vitiate such a pleading. Nor will a mistake in spelling, not obscuring the sense, vitiate such a pleading,³² unless it is such as might mislead the [b] Though it was sought in an indictment for perjury to charge the defendant with the making of two "statements," the omission of the letter "s" from the word "statement," making it singular instead of plural, was not fatal to the indictment. Freeman v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. 496, 502, 72 S. W. 1001.

[c] There is no reason why the statutory provisions that, "the use of the singular number includes the plural, and the plural the singular; and words used in the masculine gender include the feminine also, unless, by reasonable construction, it appears that such was not the intention of the language," "should not apply as well to the phraseology of indictments as to the construction of words in which the law defining the offense is couched, since it is ordinarily sufficient if the indictment follows the language of the statute." Snow v. State, 6 Tex. App. 234.

[d] Use of "It."—(1) In Goodson v. State, 32 Tex. 121, in an indictment for the theft of two animals, the singular pronoun "it," in reference to them, was used in charging the intent. It was held that the pronoun was to be referred to the "property" in the animals; and therefore its use correct. (2) In Pate v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. 373, 83 S. W. 695, an indictment for the theft of several hogs alleged that accused took said hogs with intent to deprive said owner of the value of the same, and to appropriate said hogs to his use and benefit; it was contended that it should have used the pronoun "it" instead of the word "hogs," and that "it" in this connection refers to the value of said hogs and not to the hogs themselves. The court said: "We are inclined to believe that 'it' refers to the property stolen,—but whether it refers to the property stolen or to the value thereof, makes no difference. An intent to deprive the owner of the property itself, embraces the intent to deprive such owner of the value thereof. The court did not err in refusing to quash the indictment."

That a mere verbal inaccuracy will not, where the meaning is clear, vitiate a criminal pleading, see infra, this section.

[c] The indictment was quashed (1) in Jones v. State, 25 Tex. App. 621, 8 S. W. 801, 8 Am. St. Rep. 449, because the word "appropriate" was misspelled. (2) But in the later case of Francis v. [a] Illustrations.—(1) The use of "August" for "September" (State v. Eaton, 75 Mo. 586, 595), (2) or of "May" for "November" (Com. v. Ailstock, 3 Gratt. [Va.] 620), where it appears on the face of the indictment that it is a clerical mistake, is not ground for arresting judgment.

[b] The mere transposition of the word "did" from before "feloniously" to after "aforethought" in the averment that the defendant "did feloniously, fully, and of his mance aforethought kill and murder the deceased," does not in any way affect the validity of the indictment. State v. Max, 129 La. 546, 56 So. 503. As to effect of omission of word "did," see infra, IX, C, 2, f.

[c] The use of superfluous words by a clerical mistake will not invalidate an indictment, if such words do not in any sense obscure the meaning thereof. Thus, an indictment was not rendered defective by the use of the words, "against the peace and dignity of the state of Arkansas," following the part of the indictment which set forth an alleged forged instrument, where the use did not obscure the meaning of the indictment, and was a clerical mistake. Bennett v. State, 96 Ark. 101, 131 S. W. 213.

[a] "Before an objection because of false grammar, incorrect spelling, or mere clerical errors, is entertained, the court should be satisfied of the tendency of the error to mislead, or to leave in doubt as to the meaning, a person of common understanding, reading, not for the purpose of finding defects, but to ascertain what is intended to be charged." Grant v. State, 55 Ala. 201; Witt v. State, 5 Ala. App. 137, 59 So. 715; Sanders v. State, 2 Ala. App. 13, 56 So. 69.

[b] If by misspelling, another word different from the one intended was formed, (1) and it occurs in a material part of an indictment, the defect is fatal to the indictment. State v. Caspary, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 356, wherein the word "farther" was used for "father" in an indictment for bastardy. (2) Likewise an indictment charging a breaking and entering a "dwell-house" instead of "dwelling" is fatal (Parker v. State, 114 Ala. 690, 22 So. 791), (3) as is the omission of "ing" from the word "dwelling" in an indictment for burglary. Parker v. State, supra. (4) So too, the charging of an entry into a stable with intent to commit "larcey" instead of "larceny," is fatal (People v. St. Clair, 56 Cal. 406). (5) It has also been held that the word "burgerally" is not idem sonans with "burglary" (Haney v. State, 2 Tex. App. 504); (6) that the word "possession" is not sufficient for word "possession" in indictment for robbery (Evans v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. 110, 29 S. W. 266), (7) and that the word "congration" is not sufficient for the word "congregation" in an indictment for disturbing a congregation of people meeting for religious worship. State v. Mitchell, 25 Mo. 420.

[c] Mistake in Name.—Where, in an indictment for murder, the name of the deceased is substituted for that of the accused in a material clause thereof, the mistake can neither be corrected nor ignored, and is fatal to the indictment. State v. Edwards, 70 Mo. 180. Compare State v. Craighead, 32 Mo. 561.

f. *Effect of Omission of Words.*⁴⁰—The omission of an immaterial word, or group of words, where the omission does not render the averment misleading or destroy its sense, is not a fatal defect.⁴¹ It is otherwise, where an essential word or group of words is omitted, however.⁴² The difficulty arises in the application of these rules—what constitutes a material or an immaterial word depending as a rule upon the circumstances of each particular case.⁴³ Statutes sometimes

[a] In such a case, although it be but a preposition or a helping verb, the court will not, from a knowledge of the language, supply the missing word, so as to supply the probable intention of the grand jury, but will sustain a judgment quashing the indictment. State v. Daugherty, 30 Tex. 360.

43. Immaterial Omission.—The omission of the following words has been held not to render the indictment or information fatally defective: (1) of word “for” in recital that “the grand jurors within and for the body of the county,” etc. (State v. Brady, 14 Vt. 353), (2) of word “is” in usual formula, “whose name is to the grand jury unknown” (Stallworth v. State, 155 Ala. 14, 46 So. 518), (3) of word “an” before word “unmarried” in averment that accused had “carnal knowledge of unmarried female” (State v. Perrigin, 258 Mo. 233, 167 S. W. 573), (4) of word “was” before the word “willfully” in averment in indictment for perjury, that accused made a statement “which said statement willfully . . . false,” etc. (Chase v. State [Tex. App.], 28 S. W. 952), (5) of word “his” before word “hands” in indictment for murder, alleging that defendant, with a certain gun which he in both hands then and there held, etc., feloniously did shoot, etc. (Ward v. State, 8 Blackf. [Ind.] 101), (6) of word “said,” before word “mule” in averment “whereas, in truth and fact, mule was not sound,” etc., in indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses (State v. Burke, 108 N. C. 750, 12 S. E. 1000), (7) of word “attorney” in recital of presentment of information by county attorney. Caskey v. State (Tex. App.), 50 S. W. 703.

[a] Material Omission.—The omission of the following words has been held to render it fatally defective: (1) the word “at” before the words “a certain public house” in an indictment for playing at a game with cards upon which money was bet, at a certain public house (State v. Huston, 12 Tex. 245), (2) the word “to” before the word “kill,” in an averment that defendant made an assault in and upon person of L., “with intent him, the said L., then and there kill and murder” (Jones v. State, 21 Tex. App. 349, 17 S. W. 424), (3) the word “deliberately,” in indictment for murder in first degree. Cannon v. State, 60 Ark. 564, 31 S. W. 150, 32 S. W. 128. But see 11 STANDARD PROC. 621, et seq.

[b] The omission of the word “with” (1) in stating the means by which a homicide was committed has been held not to obscure the sense and expressly provide that the omission of certain words or phrases shall not render the pleading defective.⁴⁴

The omission of the word "did" in the charging part of an indictment or information for a felony, has been held fatal in some jurisdictions,⁴⁵ but in misdemeanors, where a more liberal rule of pleading prevails, such an omission, appearing to be purely clerical, is not deemed fatal,⁴⁶ and, if desirable for completeness of statement, will be supplied by intendment,⁴⁷ though here again the authorities are not in accord, some holding that even in misdemeanor cases, such omission is fatal.⁴⁸ meaning of the accusation (Shay v. People, 22 N. Y. 317); (2) but upon this proposition there is authority to the contrary. State v. Rector, 126 Mo. 328, 23 S. W. 1074. And see State v. Furgerson, 152 Mo. 92, 53 S. W. 427.

[c] The omission of the word "of"

(1) "presents no error, when, by reading the entire indictment, the intent and meaning is made perfectly clear." Stephens v. State (Tex. Crim.), 154 S. W. 996. And see State v. Rhodes, 2 Ind. 321; Stanfield v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. 10, 62 S. W. 917. (2) Thus, its omission in the description of the ownership of stolen property has been held not to render indictment defective (Abernathy v. State, 78 Ala. 411), (3) though here again there is authority to the contrary. Riley v. State, 27 Tex. App. 606, 11 S. W. 642, holding omission of word "of" from averment that an article was taken "from the possession H." fatal.

[d] Omission of dollar sign not a fatal defect. State v. Wainwright, 128 Tenn. 544, 162 S. W. 583.

44. See generally the statutes, and supra, IX, C, 2, c.

45. La.—State v. Graham, 49 La. Ann. 1524, 22 So. 807, fatal on motion to quash. Miss.—McCearley v. State, 97 Miss. 556, 52 So. 796; Cook v. State, 72 Miss. 517, 17 So. 228. Mo.—State v. Hagan, 164 Mo. 654, 660, 65 S. W. 249. N. M.—Territory v. Church, 14 N. M. 226, 91 Pac. 720. S. C.—*State v. Dec. 738, the indictment, which was for passing counterfeit money, charged that the defendant "feloniously utter and publish, dispose and pass," etc., but omitted the word "did," before utter, and the court arrested the judgment because no charge was made that the defendant did the act. (3) Compare People v. Duford, 66 Mich. 90, 33 N. W. 28, wherein the court refused to arrest judgment on account of clerical omission of such word. It said: "If the respondent desired to take advantage of the defect relied upon, he should have demurred or moved to quash."

g. *Interlineations, Erasures and Insertion of Words.*⁴⁹ — The insertion of a material word in an indictment after its finding renders the indictment fatally defective,⁵⁰ as words cannot be interpolated in the indictment so as to change the offense charged therein to another than that for which the grand jury indicted the defendant,⁵¹ even by his consent.⁵²

The indictment does not import such verity that defendant should not be permitted to show that an alteration was made by one not authorized to make it and after the finding of the indictment and the discharge of the grand jury.⁵³ Such alteration of the record should be brought to the attention of the court promptly and at the earliest opportunity at which it can be done, after the alteration has come to the knowledge of either party;⁵⁴ but the failure of the defendant to do so does not give the court jurisdiction to try defendant for an offense other than that for which the grand jury indicted him.⁵⁵

An indictment is not vitiated, however, where it is conveniently legible, simply because it contains interlineations,⁵⁶ or erasures,⁵⁷ especially where such interlineations or erasures were apparently made before it was acted upon by the grand jury.⁵⁸

Erasures,⁵⁹ or interlineations, in the absence of anything appearing upon the face of a written instrument, or being shown extrinsically

51. People v. Granice, 50 Cal. 447, wherein offense was changed from manslaughter to murder.

But the insertion of pencil memoranda in an indictment, made without intent to alter it, however, does not render the indictment bad, and require a new trial upon motion in arrest of judgment where the words inserted were erased and the cause tried upon the indictment as originally found. Bostock v. State, 61 Ga. 635.

[a] Parol Evidence.—Such alteration may be shown by parol. State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796.

[b] The proper method of making the objection is by motion to restore the indictment to the condition it was in before the interlineation or insertion of words was made. Such an objection may be raised, however, on motion in arrest of judgment showing the insertion of words necessary to charge an offense. State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796.

[c] Such a motion is not an impeachment of the verity of the record, but is simply proving that such fraudulent interlineation or insertion was really never a part of the record. State v. Vest, 21 W. Va. 796.

tending to prove that they were made subsequently to the execution of the instrument will be presumed to have been made before or at its execution,⁶⁰ and by the proper authority.⁶¹

An alteration in the name of the defendant in order to conform to the facts, made at the time of arraignment is not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment,⁶² and under the modern statutes directing the indictment to be corrected by the insertion of the defendant's right name where it appears he has been indicted by the wrong name, this is the only procedure possible; if the court refuses to do this the error necessitates a reversal.⁶³

[c] Though the name of person alleged to have been murdered has been crossed out, and another name in different ink and different handwriting, is written in, the indictment, a demurrer (1) upon the ground that the person alleged to have been murdered is not sufficiently identified (Cook v. State, 119 Ga. 108, 46 S. E. 64), or (2) on the ground that "said indictment shows upon its face interlineations, substitutions and changes from the form in which it was originally drawn" (Allen v. State, 123 Ga. 499, 51 S. E. 506), is without merit.

People*, 76 Ill. 274) is insufficient, (4) though it has been held that a charge on oath "that the complainant has probable cause to suspect" that the accused has committed the crime charged, while not sufficient to support a conviction, is sufficient for purpose of arrest and examination. Com. v. Phillips, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 211.

[c] Whereas.—(1) A criminal charge cannot be alleged with a "that whereas." Axtell v. State, 173 Ind. 711, 91 N. E. 354. (2) But the word "whereas" may be used in such a sense that what follows may be positive averment, and not recital. People v. Ennis, 137 Cal. 263, 70 Pac. 84; People v. Fitzgerald, 92 Mich. 328, 52 N. W. 726. (3) In People v. Ennis, 137 Cal. 263, 70 Pac. 84, the court said: "It is better, no doubt, to avoid the use of the word 'whereas' in a pleading; but it may be observed that whatever is in itself a positive averment is not turned into recital by the mere fact that somewhere preceding the averment the word 'whereas' is used. The effect of that word depends upon how it is connected with the succeeding part of the sentence. 'That whereas' is the form generally held objectionable in the older decisions. But the word may be used in the sense given to it in the dictionaries as synonymous with 'when in fact,' 'while the contrary,' 'the fact is,' etc.; and when used in that sense, as shown by the context, what follows may be positive averment, and not recital."

[d] An indictment for using the mails with intent to effect a scheme to defraud was not bad because the scheme or artifice was pleaded by way of recital and not by direct averment, where it was charged that on a given day the defendants had devised a fraudulent scheme, such charge sufficiently showing that the defendants theretofore did devise such scheme. *Wilson v. c. *Use of Scilicet or Videlicet.*⁷⁵—The use of the scilicet or videlicet is not, as a rule, objectionable,⁷⁶ since as to essential matters alleged thereunder, the averments are regarded as positive and direct;⁷⁷ while as to matters not essential, the pleader is neither concluded thereby nor bound to prove the same.⁷⁸ Indeed, its common office is to state time, place, or manner which are not of the essence of the matter in issue, and thereby to relieve the party of the duty of proving the allegation strictly as made,⁷⁹ though it is frequently used, as in other pleadings, for the purpose of particularizing the more general antecedent matter.⁸⁰

If matter laid under a videlicet or scilicet be immaterial, though it be repugnant to what precedes, it will not vitiate the indictment,⁸¹ but the scilicet or videlicet will be rejected as surplusage.⁸² It is otherwise, of course, if the matter so averred is of the gist of the offense, and the same is repugnant to what precedes.⁸³

4. Definiteness, Certainty and Particularity. — a. *In General.*⁸⁴

At common law, the rule was fundamental, that an indictment must be certain and particular in its allegations,⁸⁵ so that it could be seen upon inspection, not merely what nature of crime, but what particular crime is intended to be charged.⁸⁶ While the same degree of certainty and particularity as was required at common law is not always necessary under modern statutory provisions governing criminal pleading,⁸⁷ such statutes do not dispense with the necessity for certainty.⁸⁸

The general rule is that whatever is essential to the gravamen of the offense charged, must be set forth with particularity and certainty, all the authorities concurring that ambiguity and uncertainty is fatal to an indictment or information.⁸⁹

More particularly, the offense must be charged with such degree of certainty and particularity of statement as will identify the charge, lest the grand jury should find a bill for one offense, and the defend-conviction, to pronounce the proper judgment, and regulate the appropriate punishment.⁹⁷

These are the tests which will in most cases, determine the sufficiency of the description of the offense in a criminal pleading, so far as particularity and certainty are concerned,⁹⁸ and if the pleading conform thereto, it is sufficient under the modern rules, although it does not

[a] Though an information, in charging the offense, does not extend to all the details which the utmost certainty might require, if the court can pronounce judgment upon conviction according to the right of the case, that is sufficient. State v. Garrett, 78 Kan. 882, 98 Pac. 219.

97. Wingard v. State, 13 Ga. 396; Youmans v. State, 7 Ga. App. 101, 66 S. E. 383; McLaughlin v. State, 45 Ind. 238.

98. Daniels v. United States, 196 Fed. 459, 465, 116 C. C. A. 233, 239.

[a] "As we said in Daniels v. United States, 196 Fed. 459, 465, 116 C. C. A. 233, 239: 'In such ambiguity as exists, we fail to find any failure to state facts constituting a crime or any tendency to mislead the respondent or any danger that he will be exposed to a second prosecution on account of any of the subject matter; and these are the tests which will, in most cases, determine the sufficiency of the description of the offense as found in an indictment.'" Ulmer v. United States (C. C. A.), 219 Fed. 641.

[b] "The cardinal tests of sufficiency of the averments of fact in an indictment are twofold: (a) They must embrace every element of the offense charged and plainly apprise the accused of the proof he must be prepared to meet, and (b) must so state the charge that judgment thereunder can be pleaded in bar of further prosecution for the same offense. These essentials cannot be disregarded, but the rule is settled in the federal jurisdiction that the entire purpose of criminal pleadings, 'to convict the guilty as well as to shield the innocent' (Evans v. United States, 153 U. S. 584, 590, 14 Sup. Ct. 934, 38 L. ed. 830), must be observed in considering their sufficiency; and that the test to be applied is not whether the material averments might have been made more accurate and certain, but whether they plainly embrace in their terms both requirements, of notice of the ultimate facts to be proved against the accused and specification thereof will leave no second prosecution open for the alleged offense; and that, if these requisites are sufficiently stated, the indictment will be upheld, especially after verdict, although lumbered with inaccuracies otherwise, or improper statements not applicable to the issue.'" Baskin v. United States, 209 Fed. 740, 126 C. C. A. 464.

[c] The degree of particularity requisite to fairly accomplish these purposes is all that is required in any case. No useless or impracticable standards which may embarrass rather than aid the administration of justice should be required. Averments of the essential elements just suggested which are plain and intelligible to the common understanding are, as against a demurrer, entirely sufficient without regard to their technical accuracy. Smith v. United States, 157 Fed. 721, 85 C. C. A. 353.

[d] The true test is not whether the indictment might possibly have been made more certain, but whether it contains every element of the offense intended to be charged and sufficiently apprises the accused of what they must be prepared to meet, and, in case any other proceedings are taken against them for a similar offense, whether the record shows with accuracy to what extent they may plead a former acquittal or conviction. Horn v. United States, 182 Fed. 721, 728, 105 C. C. A. 163; Peters v. United States, 94 Fed. 127, 36 C. C. A. 105.

[e] "It is true that an indictment should be reasonably certain as to the offense charged in order that the defendant may not be surprised and may be able to prepare to make his defense, and also to enable him to plead a judgment of acquittal or conviction in bar to a subsequent prosecution for the contain all the phraseology and technical language ordinarily used therein.⁹⁹ Tested by these rules, indictments have been held sufficient in many cases, a few of which are cited in the note.¹

Minor circumstances which are merely incidental to or descriptive of the main fact need only be stated with that degree of particularity that carries knowledge of the offense and bars a future prosecution.²

In framing an indictment, under a statute which denounces a crime based upon the commission of a previous and different crime, the same technical particularity in describing the previous crime is not required as would have been in an indictment charging such original crime.³

b. Matters of Inducement are not required to be stated with the same particularity as matters of substance;⁴ but may be in a general same offense. This is all that a defendant is in reason and justice entitled to. If an indictment is couched in such language as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, it is all that the law requires." Price v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. 359, 131 Pac. 1102.

[f] An indictment may contain more than is necessary, or it may be phrased in inapt words, or the sentences may be ungrammatically or awkwardly expressed, or the spelling not conform to approved standards, but if, when considered as a whole, the charge is stated with sufficient clearness and certainty to enable a person of common understanding to know what he is charged with, and to enable the court to pronounce judgment, no error in form of expression will make the indictment bad. *Overstreet v. Law Dict. (Rawle's Rev.) 300, and cases cited. In State v. Downer, 21 Wis. 274, it was held that 'certainty in charging the offense to a common intent is all that is required by the rules of pleading in regard to indictments.' Such certainty is attained 'by a form of state-all that follows can be rejected as surplusage, the defect does not vitiate the indictment.²⁰ The objection has generally been confined to the statement of the offense,²¹ and rests on the ground that it does not appear what particular offense the defendant is required to answer.²² Accordingly, if the matter charged in the alternative is not in respect to matters descriptive of the offense,²³ as where the matter charged disjunctively is matter of aggravation only,²⁴ or the matter following the disjunctive can be properly construed to be descriptive of that which precedes it, and not an independent allegation,²⁵ to use the disjunctive "or" does not vitiate the indictment.

25. Henderson v. State, 113 Ga. 1148, 39 S. E. 446.

[a] To charge betting at a game known as "craps," which is a game of "hazard or skill," does not render indictment bad. State v. Hester, 48 Ark. 40, 2 S. W. 339.

[b] The rule seems to be that if the disjunctive averment need not be supported by proof, or if the proof which is to be admitted thereunder is the same as that which would be admitted under the immediately preceding averment, or something which would be purely explanatory thereof, the insertion of the disjunctive allegation will not render the pleading defective. Henderson v. State, 113 Ga. 1148, 39 S. E. 446.

[c] Limits of Rule.—"The reason for discarding the disjunctive and substituting the conjunctive, was that usually the alternative charge left the defendant in such doubt as to the nature of the offence which he was held to answer, that he could not intelligently prepare his defence. . . . But upon the maxim, cessante ratione

This rule that the conjunctive form of averment must be adopted, does not apply to cases where the words used in the alternative are synonymous,²⁶ or where the word "or" in a statute, is used in the sense of "to-wit," that is, in explanation of what precedes²⁷ and makcessat et ipsa lex, the better rule seems now to be that 'or' is only fatal when the use of it renders the statement of the offence uncertain, and not so when one term is used only as explaining or illustrating the other, or where the language of the law makes either an attempt or procurement of an act, or the act itself, in the alternative, indictable. 1 Wharton, C. L., §294; United States v. Potter, 6 McLean 186. Where it is manifest that the defendant cannot be embarrassed by uncertainty in preparing his defence by reason of the use of the disjunctive instead of the conjunctive, if the form ordinarily used in drawing the indictment should be treated as an established precedent essential in all cases, it would be an arbitrary and unreasonable rule." State v. Van Doran, 109 N. C. 864, 866, 14 S. E. 32.

State, 45 Ga. 11 ("play or roll billiards"); Whitaker v. State, 11 Ga. App. 208, 75 S. E. 258. Kan.—Wessels v. Territory, 1 Kan. 525, "two steers" or "working cattle." Mo.—State v. Snyder, 182 Mo. 462, 82 S. W. 12; State v. Ellis, 4 Mo. 474. Pa.—Com. v. McDermott, 37 Pa. Super. 1. Tex.—White v. State (Tex. Crim.), 157 S. W. 152. Vt.—State v. Gilbert, 13 Vt. 647, wherein horse stolen was alleged to have been of a "bay or brown" color.

[a] Reason.—(1) In such case, there is but one act described (People v. Tomlinson, 35 Cal. 503), (2) but one offense being laid as committed in different ways. Thompson v. State, 37 Ark. 408.

[b] To charge the forgery of a "writing or paper" in the alternative does not render the indictment bad, as the terms import the same thing, a written instrument. Blais v. State, 94 Ark. 327, 126 S. W. 1064.

[c] Mere Reiteration.—The word "or" is sometimes used to introduce a reiteration of the same idea, and to express it in a somewhat different way, in which case it is not objectionable. Thus for an indictment to charge that liquor was sold "to a minor or to a person under twenty-one years," is not to charge the crime in the alternative, for the manifest meaning of the language in that case is simply to make the last clause explanatory of the first. Whitaker v. State, 11 Ga. App. 208, 75 S. E. 258.

[d] Examples of Synonymous Terms Disjunctively Charged.—(1) "To a minor or to a person under twenty-one years," in an indictment for selling liquor to minor (Whitaker v. State, 11 Ga. App. 208, 75 S. E. 258), (2) or "store or shop" in indictment for statutory burglary (Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 432), (3) or "violent or tumultuous" in an indictment for unlawful assembly (Bonneville v. State, 53 Wis. 680, 11 N. W. 427), (4) or on the trial of the "cause or issue" in an indictment for perjury (State v. Bishop, 1 D. Chip. [Vt.] 120), (5) or an indictment for practicing medicine without a license and charging that defendant did then and there in the manner herein stated, unlawfully treat a "disease or disorder," to-wit, for tuberculosis and constipation, etc., is not objectionable for uncertainty. White v. State (Tex. Crim.), 157 S. W. 152. (6) So, an allegation that the accused sold A "two shares of stock, or what purported to be two shares of stock" does not subject the indictment to a demurrer based on this ground; the pleader by the use of the additional expression "or what purported to be two shares of stock," merely amplified his previous allegation, and made it more certain. Whitaker v. State, 11 Ga. App. 208, 75 S. E. 253.

27. Ill.—Blemer v. People, 76 Ill. 265; People v. Jackson, 181 Ill. App. 713. Mass.—Brown v. Com., 8 Mass. 59. N. C.—State v. Harper, 64 N. C. 129. Wis.—Clifford v. State, 29 Wis. 327.

[a] If the disjunctive can be properly construed to be synonymous with to-wit, the alternative allegation will ing it signify the same thing. The use of the word "or" in making negative averments is also proper.²³

Some statutes provide that offenses of the same character and subject to the same punishment may be charged together in the alternative in the same count,²⁹ and are constitutional.³⁰ Under such statutes offenses of the same character, but not subject to the same punishment cannot be charged in the alternative,³¹ and if it is sought to charge two separate offenses in the same count they must be charged in the alternative not in the conjunctive.³² Alternative averments, however, must each present an indictable offense; and if in such an indictment, one or more of the alternatives expressed charges no offense, then the indictment is bad in toto;³³ and unless each separate alternative charged is alleged with certainty, particularity, and definiteness, the indictment is defective.³⁴ Statutes sometimes provide that when an not render the indictment bad. Henderson v. State, 113 Ga. 1148, 39 S. E. 446.

[b] If the gist of the offense is the failure to do something which it is the defendant's duty to do, such as the practice of medicine or dentistry without taking out a license or certificate, the allegation should follow the statute and use the word "or," because the doing of either act would excuse defendant, and he would not be required to do both. Byrd v. State (Tex. Crim.), 162 S. W. 360.

32. Thomas v. State, 111 Ala. 51, 20 So. 617; Burgess v. State, 44 Ala. 190.

[a] If the indictment charges the injury to a "mare and an ox" it must be proved they were injured at one and the same time or the variance will be fatal. Burgess v. State, 44 Ala. 190.

[b] A conviction can be claimed on only one specific offense, (1) however, the law leaving it to the jury under all the evidence, of which specific offense charged, the defendant is guilty (Allison v. State, 1 Ala. App. 206, 55 So. 453), (2) but the state cannot be put to an election as to which crime it will ask for a conviction. Carleton v. State, 100 Ala. 130, 14 So. 472; Allison v. State, 1 Ala. App. 206, 55 So. 453.

[a] To charge selling of spirituous, venous or "maltous" liquors instead of malt liquors does not render indictment demurrable within above rule. Couch v. State, 6 Ala. App. 43, 60 So. 539.

[b] Under statute making it an offense to override, overload, deprive of necessary sustenance, cruelly beat, mutilate or cruelly kill any animal, an indictment charging that defendant did override, overload, deprive of necessary sustenance, cruelly beat, mutilate or kill a mule is bad in toto as "cruelly" does not qualify the word "kill." Abercrombie v. State, 8 Ala. App. 326, 62 So. 966.

[a] This defect cannot be cured by an election to prosecute only on the alternative averments charging an of-

act is criminal if producing different results, such results may be charged in the alternative;³⁵ or provide that where offenses may be committed by different means it is permissible to charge the same in the alternative,³⁶ but the pleader is not compelled to use the alternative form of expression.³⁷ Nor does the latter statute authorize the charging of different offenses in the same count.³⁸

6. Repugnancy.³⁹—If two material averments in an indictment are repugnant to each other the indictment is fatally defective.⁴⁰ Thus an indictment charging a statutory offense and then containing fense, as this would amount to an amendment of the indictment. Dix v. State, 8 Ala. App. 338, 62 So. 1007.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) An indictment charging fraudulent issue of a blank certificate of ownership of certain shares of stock of the following "tenor" is fatally repugnant as a blank certificate cannot purport ownership or have a tenor (State v. Haven, 59 Vt. 399, 9 Atl. 841); (2) so is one charging that defendant by one and the same act embezzled and stole the same property. McCann v. United States, 2 Wyo. 274. (3) An indictment for forging a writing is fatally defective which describes it by saying "purporting to be signed by the president and directors," and setting out the forged writing verbatim, upon the face of which it does not appear to have been by order of the president and directors. State v. Shawley, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 256. (4) To charge that the defendant "willfully" and with "culpable negligence" killed deceased (State v. Lockwood, 119 Mo. 163, 24 S. W. 1015) renders the indictment fatally inconsistent.

[b] Repugnancy between the re-allegations showing an offense not within the statute,⁴¹ or charging an offense against a person by his Christian name and alleging his true Christian name is unknown,⁴² or repugnant as to the time,⁴³ or place of the commission of the offense,⁴⁴ is fatally defective. An indictment is repugnant where it charges defendant with the commission of the act as well as being an accessory before the fact,⁴⁵ except where the statute has abolished the distinction between principals and accessories.⁴⁶ An indictment is not repugnant or ambiguous because showing the commission of the act in an improbable, though not physically impossible manner.⁴⁷ Other illustrations of allegations held not to be repugnant may be found in the note.⁴⁸

The allegation that his Christian name is unknown may be rejected as surplusage. Taylor v. State, 100 Ala. 68, 14 So. 875.

[a] Store and Shop.—An indictment alleged that the prisoner "broke and entered the store of one Merrill," and certain goods "in the shop aforesaid, then and there being, then and there in the shop aforesaid, feloniously did steal, take and carry away." The words "store" and "shop" as used in a statute making it larceny to break and enter any shop or store, were not synonymous, that the word "shop" being descriptive of the place where the larceny was committed, could not be rejected as surplusage, and that the demurrer was well taken. State v. Canney, 19 N. H. 135.

[a] To charge an assault with intent to kill with three weapons, a pair of tongs, a hammer and an axe handle does not charge an impossible act. State v. McDonald, 67 Mo. 13.

48. The following have been held not to be repugnant allegations: (1) An indictment charging defendant who was the assistant financial agent of the state penitentiary, with misappropriation of funds, as an officer of the government and a clerk and employe of the financial agent (Busby v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. 289, 103 S. W. 638), (2) or charging the acceptance of a bribe to vote for "a question which was and might be by law brought before" the defendant as state senator (State v. Smalls, 11 S. C. 262), (3) or describing a letter sent through mail as "letter and communication" (Larison v. State, 49 N. J. L. 256, 9 Atl. 700, 60 Am. Rep. 606), (4) or charging larceny of a specified sum in bank notes usually known as green backs (State v. Hockenberry, 30 Iowa 504), (5) to charge that defendant did "remove and destroy a certain fence" (Phillips v. State, 29 Tex. 226), (6) or utter a false, forged and counterfeit bank note. Mackey v. State, 3 Ohio St. 362; Stoughton v. State, 2 Ohio St. 562.

[a] There is no repugnancy between the purport and tenor clauses as to the Statutes sometimes provide that repugnancy in an indictment shall not vitiate the same if sufficient be alleged to show the offense and person charged,⁴⁹ in which case, unless the indictment or information contains matter which if true, would constitute a legal justification or bar to the prosecution, repugnancy does not vitiate the same.⁵⁰

If the repugnant allegation may be rejected as surplusage, the indictment is, of course, not vitiated thereby,⁵¹ especially under statutes providing that the omission or insertion of words of surplusage or words not necessary to be proved shall not vitiate an indictment.⁵² Thus an indictment is not rendered bad because of repugnancy in regard official status and functions of the officer administering the oath where the purport clause describes the officer as justice of the peace and ex officio notary public, and the instrument set out in haec verba showed the jurat to be signed by the designated person as justice of the peace of a designated precinct. Waters v. State, 30 Tex. App. 284, 17 S. W. 411.

[a] The purpose of such a statute was and is to free the criminal practice from some of the technical rules of the common law which have outlived their usefulness, and which ought to have passed away with the necessities which brought them into being. Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 379.

[b] Repugnancy. (1) under such statutes, where defendant is truly named in body of indictment, but another person named in title (State v. Boss, 74 Ind. 80), (2) or where forgery of an instrument set out in haec verba signed by Dr. W. is charged and the indictment charges forgery of an order purporting to be signed by V. T. W. (Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 379), is not fatal.

[c] Using of names "B." and "B. Sr." interchangeably in an affidavit does not render the affidavit void for repugnancy, as the addition of "Sr." is a matter of description only. State v. Simpson, 166 Ind. 211, 76 N. E. 511, 1005.

[b] Where the indictment charges a certain offense by name and the facts alleged show another offense the repugnancy is harmless. State v. Snyder, 113 Minn. 244, 129 N. W. 375.

[c] An inconsistent or repugnant clause or averment concluding an indictment, such as a misnomer of the defendant, should be treated as surplusage, when the other averments clearly charge the defendant with the commission of the crime. Kennedy v. State, 62 Ind. 136.

[d] Location of Wound.—Where deceased is alleged to have been shot by defendant, and it is charged that the shot gave a mortal wound of which he died, an allegation describing the wound in one place as just above the nipple of the left breast and subsequently as below the nipple of the left breast, does not render the indictment defective, as the allegation as to the place of the wound may be rejected as surplusage. Robertson v. Com. (Va.), 20 S. E. 362.

[e] Repugnancy in Middle Name. To charge the defendant in one part in the name of R. D. Eddison, and later clause referring to him as the said R. H. Eddison does not render the indictment void. Eddison v. State (Tex. Crim.), 73 S. W. 397.

to non-traversable matter laid after a scilicet,⁵³ or because a misdemeanor is alleged to have been done "feloniously."⁵⁴ If an allegation be sensible and consistent in the place where it occurs and be not repugnant to antecedent matter, it cannot be rejected as surplusage, though it be repugnant to a subsequent allegation.⁵⁵

all the facts be averred which in law may influence the punishment.⁵⁹ By express provision of statute in some states, that which is not necessary to be proved need not be alleged.⁶⁰

If it be intended to charge a crime by the commission of an act criminal only from the color given to it by extrinsic facts, which explain its criminal aspects, such facts should be set out by way of inducement, colloquium or innuendo in the indictment, or their absence will invalidate it.⁶¹

An indictment which alleges a crime, but does not state the acts constituting that crime, would be bad. Likewise an indictment which stated the acts, without alleging the crime charged against the defendant, would also be bad. People v. Quartararo, 76 Misc. 55, 133 N. Y. Supp. 985.

[b] To simply charge that a person committed murder or larceny is not sufficient. State v. Smith, 25 Idaho 541, 138 Pac. 1107.

[c] "It is necessary in some way to inform the party accused as to how

69. "To charge a person with murder, robbery, grand larceny, or being accessory to the commission of either crime would obviously be the statement of a legal conclusion. And an averment that a party concealed the commission of an offense is as obviously the statement of a mere abstract legal proposition. The indictment must show on its face the acts or facts from which the conclusion flows. The concealment of a crime 'necessarily includes the element of some affirmative act,' and the particular affirmative act constituting the offense must be stated in the indictment, to the end that the court and defendant may know, independently of the conclusion stated, that such act constitutes an offense against the law." Ex parte Goldman, 7 Cal. Unrep. 254, 88 Pac. 819.

Legal conclusions generally, see infra, IX, D, 5.

70. As to necessity for stating name of offense in caption, see supra, VIII, A, 3, c, (VII); for indorsement on in-any specific name to the offense charged, so long as the indictment or information sets forth facts constituting an offense,⁷¹ the same being characterized, not by its specific designation, in the indictment, but by the criminal acts alleged to have been committed.⁷² Neither will a discrepancy or mistake in the name of the offense charged vitiate the pleading where the particular facts necessary to constitute the offense charged are specifically and accurately set forth.⁷³

Statutes sometimes provide that the indictment or information shall name the crime with which the defendant is charged.⁷⁴ But even

under such a statute a mistake in naming the crime shown by the particular facts set forth, is not fatal.⁷⁵

Degree or Character of Offense.—If a statute makes a particular act or acts a crime of a particular grade, and such acts are set forth in the indictment, there is no necessity for charging the legal conclusion that the particular acts amount to the crime of the grade declared.⁷⁶ The indictment need not state in terms that the offense is a felony or misdemeanor.⁷⁷

[a] All facts necessary to support the conclusion should be specifically averred. State v. Piper, 73 N. H. 226, 60 Atl. 742.

[b] "All courts agree that an offense is charged by the statement of the material facts which constitute it, and not by the statement of a mere conclusion of law." State v. Heath, 57 Wash. 246, 106 Pac. 756.

Charging offense by name only, see supra, IX, D, 1.

[c] Illustrations.—(1) Such allegations, as "such allowance being illegal and unwarranted" in reference to an allowance by an auditor (State v. Trueblood, 25 Ind. App. 437, 57 N. E. 975), (2) that claim was too high for work done, in indictment for presenting false claim against a county (State v. Metsker, 169 Ind. 555, 83 N. E. 241), (3) that such funds are "due and owing to the state of Indiana," in a prosecution against a clerk of court for failing to pay over moneys collected by him for fines, etc. (State v. Record, 56 Ind. 107), (4) or that a person assaulted was engaged in the execution of "a lawful process or mandate" (People v. Cooper, 3 N. Y. Crim. 117), (5) that the defendant "practiced medicine" on a certain day, in a prosecution for practicing without a license (State v. Carey, 4 Wash. 424, 30 Pac. 729) are mere conclusions and insufficient, (6) as is a charge that accused was guilty of the offense of keeping a disorderly house, instead of a charge that the accused "did keep" such a house. Lasindo v. State, 2 Tex. App. 59.

[d] In United States v. John Reardon & Sons Co., 191 Fed. 454, it is held that "it is never sufficient to allege that an act is illegal, but you must allege something more which the court can see on the face of the indictment is illegal if the facts are proven."

[e] An indictment for unlawfully rescuing a prisoner, which charges that the prisoner rescued was "lawfully"

in custody, without a presentation of the facts, is defective, as it states merely a conclusion of law. Com. v. Clark, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 622.

[f] The phrase "did assault" is a conclusion of the pleader, and not an averment of a material fact. State v. Heath, 57 Wash. 246, 106 Pac. 756, citing State v. Smith, 71 Ind. 557.

[g] That defendant "killed and murdered" a designated person is not a conclusion, however. Lane v. State, 151 Ind. 511, 51 N. E. 1056.

[h] Nor is an allegation that the bank of which accused was president was insolvent when he received the deposit in question objectionable as a conclusion; it is an allegation of a fact. Parrish v. Com., 136 Ky. 77, 123 S. W. 339.

[i] An averment, in an indictment for sending obscene matter through the mail, that a pamphlet was obscene, lewd, and lascivious, is a statement of fact, and not a legal conclusion. Konda v. United States, 166 Fed. 91, 92 C. C. A. 75, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 304; Rinker v. United States, 151 Fed. 755, 81 C. C. A. 379, "no more a legal conclusion than was the one that the article deposited in the post office was a letter, or than would be an allegation of ownership or sale."

[j] Where an information, after charging larceny in the usual form, alleges in substance that the defendant did feloniously and purposely aid, abet and procure the thief to commit the crime, is not demurrable on the ground that it states a mere legal conclusion. Lamb v. State, 69 Neb. 212, 95 N. W. 1050.

[k] If, under a statute defining an accessory after the fact, it is unimportant how the knowledge of the commission of the crime is received by the alleged accessory, a statement in an indictment simply that he had full knowledge that the accused person had committed the crime was a statement of fact, and not of a mere conclusion. State v. Jones, 91 Ark. 5, 120 S. W. 154.

[l] An allegation as to want of license as follows: "Who was then and there not licensed under the laws of the state of Indiana to sell, barter, or give away, etc.," was held a declaration of fact, and not a recital of a conclusion in Gaussin v. State, 174 Ind. 583, 92 N. E. 651.

mere conclusions of law,⁸⁵ or matters which are a necessary conclusion or inference from facts stated.⁸⁶

It is true the pleader may charge a conclusion of law in addition to the facts from which it is derived, and is the proper and necessary sequence.⁸⁷

state to allege that they do not exist." Payne v. State, 74 Ind. 203.

[b] In an indictment for manslaughter, that the crime is committed "in the heat of passion" is a mitigating, not a differentiating, circumstance, so that a failure to allege that fact does not prejudice defendant. State v. Matakovich, 59 Minn. 514, 61 N. W. 677.

For other specific applications of this rule, see the specific titles throughout this work.

91. Goff v. State, 60 Fla. 13, 53 So. 327.

[a] Courts infer that what is not charged in an indictment does not exist, and it should therefore exclude, by proper averments, the conclusions to which the accused is thus entitled. Mears v. Com., 2 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 385.

7. Matter in Avoidance of Statute of Limitations.⁹²—According to some authorities, though the right to prosecute the offense charged is, on the face of the pleading, apparently barred, it is not necessary to allege facts removing the apparent bar of the statute.⁹³ Other authorities, however, hold that under such circumstances it is necessary to aver any facts relied upon as taking the case out of the statute.⁹⁴

92. See generally the title "Limitation of Actions."

93. See the following cases: U. S. United States v. Cook, 17 Wall. 168, 21 L. ed. 538 (leading case upon subject); United States v. White, 5 Cranch C. C. 116, 28 Fed. Cas. [a] In Thompson v. State, 54 Miss. 740, the rule is thus expressed: "A statute of limitations is never part of an offense, but always a matter of defense; nor is any allusion to time contained in our statutes relative to grand larceny. It will be time enough, therefore, for the district attorney to plead the exceptions to the statute when the statute itself has been pleaded by the accused. No sound rule of pleading can require him, in preferring the indictment, to anticipate the defense, and negative it by setting forth the facts which render it unavailing. If the accused pleads the statute specially, the representative of the state, by replication, will plead the exceptional facts which deprive the defendant of its protection; or if the defendant, under the plea of not guilty, invokes the protection of the statute by proof and by instructions asked, the district attorney will in the same manner claim the benefit of the exception. Such a mode of procedure is simple, free from all difficulties, and can work no harm to the accused."

Right to demur where pleading shows on its face that statutory period has run before the commencement of the prosecution, see infra, XIV, B, 1, b.

[a] "Ordinarily the offense must be laid in the indictment within the time fixed by the statute of limitation. Where, however, the statute does not impose an absolute bar, the prosecution may lay the offense outside the statute and prove without averment that the defendant was within the exception. But wherever a statute exists limiting prosecutions within fixed periods the more exact course is to state the time correctly in the indictment, and then aver the exceptions, and this mode of pleading is now generally required." N. N. & M. V. Co. v. Com., 14 Ky. L. Rep. 196, citing Whart. Crim. Pl., §318; 1 Bishop Crim. Proc., §105.

[b] The indictment must allege absence of the defendant from the state, if this is relied upon to toll the statute of limitations. People v. Miller, 12 Cal. 291.

How Averred.—It is not absolutely necessary to use the words of the statute in framing an averment to relieve the particular prosecution from the statute,⁹⁵ though it is sufficient to do so.⁹⁶ Nor need the particular facts which constitute the exception to the bar of the statute be minutely alleged.⁹⁷ cannot be regarded as a continuation of the former prosecution, so as to avoid the statute of limitations, unless it alleges the facts as to the former indictment, its dismissal, re-reference to the grand jury, etc., and thus clearly shows upon its face that the prosecution was intended to be a continuous one. Com. v. T. J. Megibben Co., 101 Ky. 195, 198, 40 S. W. 694, cited and quoted from in Combs v. Com., 27 Ky. L. Rep. 273, 84 S. W. 753; Com. v. G. W. Taylor Co., 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1334, 43 S. W. 399; N. N. & M. V. Co. v. Com., 14 Ky. L. Rep. 196, following Tulley v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 153. (2) No such averment is necessary, however, where the new indictment is found before the statutory period has expired. Com. v. C. B. Cook Co., 102 Ky. 288, 43 S. W. 400.

[d] In Pennsylvania, "in a case where the statute may be interposed, and the commonwealth alleges the defendant comes within the exception to the statute, the better practice is to aver in the indictment the facts relied upon to toll the statute," but this is not regarded as essential, however. Blackman v. Com., 124 Pa. 578, 17 Atl. 578, affirming 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 464.

[e] Where a criminal prosecution is deemed commenced when a warrant is duly issued and placed in the hands of a proper officer for execution, it is only where no warrant has been issued within the period of limitations after the commission of the offense that facts relied upon to avoid the statute must be stated. State v. Waterman, 75 Kan. 253, 88 Pac. 1074.

95. State v. Hinton, 49 La. Ann. 1354, 22 So. 617.

[a] Hence, an allegation that the offense has "just" come to the knowledge of an officer with authority to prosecute was held sufficient. State v. Hinton, 49 La. Ann. 1354, 22 So. 617.

96. Cohen v. State, 2 Ga. App. 689, 59 S. E. 4, sufficient if any of the exceptions stated in the statute be stated in the language therein employed.

97. Cohen v. State, 2 Ga. App. 689, 59 S. E. 4.

[a] As to such exceptions, the state is only required to show a prima facie case, as this is not matter essential to actual guilt or innocence of the accused. Cohen v. State, 2 Ga. App. 689, 59 S. E. 4.

[b] The allegations were sufficient to take the cases without the statutes in the following cases: La.—State v. Drummond, 132 La. 749, 61 So. 778 (allegation that the accused "fled from justice" is sufficient; not necessary for pleader to set out further particulars); State v. Hinton, 49 La. Ann. 1354, 22 So. 617; State v. Wren, 48 La. Ann. 803, 19 So. 745; State v. Strong, 39 La. Ann. 1081, 3 So. 266; State v. Vines, 34 La. Ann. 1073. Mo.—State v. Snyder, 182 Mo. 462, 82 S. W. 12, holding allegation that defendant "has not been an inhabitant of or usually resident within the state of Missouri," sufficiently alleged facts which, if true, would remove the bar of the statute of limitations otherwise apparent on the face of the indictment, and it was not necessary to allege only one of the two, nor both conjunctively, since taken together as averred, they are one and the same. Pa.—Rosenberger v. Com., 118 Pa. 77, 83, 11 Atl. 782.

[c] But see Randolph v. State, 14 Ind. 232, where the indictment alleged generally that defendant had concealed the fact of the crime charged. The court held this insufficient, saying: "The particular acts done by him, whereby he produced such concealment should have been alleged." To the same effect is Jones v. State, 14 Ind. 120.

[d] Though a statute provides for the tolling of the statute "if, when the offense is committed, defendant be out of the state," this includes a defendant leaving the state after the commission of the offense, and an indictment so alleging the exception is sufficient. People v. Montejo, 18 Cal. 38.

[e] Time of Absence or Concealment.—(1) An allegation that "ever

8. Matters of Aggravation. — a. In General. — Though a statute in defining an offense describes several degrees thereof, it is not necessary in charging the minor offense to negative the aggravating circumstances which would constitute the higher offense.⁹⁸ On the other hand, an indictment either on a statute or at the common law, fully setting out an offense, is not rendered bad by the addition of matter in aggravation, beyond what the law requires for the purpose of charging that offense;⁹⁹ and though it is sought to charge an aggravated offense, which is insufficiently done, the indictment, being sufficient as to the minor offense, will be allowed to stand, and a conviction therefor be sustained.¹

In charging an aggravated offense, it is necessary to charge, in appropriate terms the minor offense,² and then allege the particular offense which the accused intended to commit.³

b. Prior Convictions. — (I.) Necessity for Pleading. — Under some statutes, if defendant has been previously convicted of another offense, he may be punished more severely; and if it is sought to inflict the severer penalty in the prosecution for the subsequent offense, the prior conviction must be alleged in the indictment or information,⁴ though since the offense herein charged the defendant has continuously so concealed himself that process could not be served upon him" is sufficient under the Kansas statute providing that the term of absence or concealment shall not be included in computing the period of limitations. State v. Rook, 61 Kan. 382, 59 Pac. 653, 49 L. R. A. 186. (2) Under a similar Indiana statute, however, it has been held that to allege merely that accused fled from the state on a specified day is not sufficient, and that the length of time defendant was absent must be alleged. Colvin v. State, 127 Ind. 403, 26 N. E. 888.

[f] In a new indictment found upon a re-submission to the grand jury, the certainty required in charging the offense is not required in stating the proceedings under the first indictment. State v. Duclos, 35 Mo. 237, overruling State v. English, 2 Mo. 147.

[a] A statute providing that the record of a former conviction need not be "set forth particularly," in an indictment for a second offense, and that "it shall be sufficient to allege briefly that such person has been convicted of a" prior offense, implies that there must be a statement of the record if it is relied on with a view of charging the defendant with the higher penalty. Tuttle v. Com., 2 Gray (Mass.) 505; State v. Small, 64 N. H. 491, 14 Atl. 727.

[b] Such allegations are necessary (1) so as to give the accused notice that a greater penalty is sought to be inflicted than for a first offense (Neece v. State, 62 Tex. Crim. 378, 137 S. W. 919. See also State v. Paisley, 36 Mont. 237, 248, 92 Pac. 566), (2) it being an established rule of criminal pleading that "the indictment must contain an averment of every fact essential to the punishment to be inflicted." Shiflett v. Com., 114 Va. 876, 77 S. E. 606.

[c] The legislature cannot dispense with necessity of such averment, a statute attempting to do so being unconstitutional. Com. v. Harrington, 130 Mass. 35. Compare State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523.

[d] Judicial knowledge of a former conviction cannot be taken, though in the same court. State v. Davis, 68 W. Va. 142, 150, 69 S. E. 939, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 996, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501. See generally 7 ENCY. OF EV. 1003.

[e] The court will presume in absence of averment of prior conviction, that offense is a first offense, and inflict punishment accordingly. State v. Dawson, 38 Ind. App. 483, 78 N. E. 352; Britton v. State, 101 Miss. 584, 58 So. 530.

upon this proposition, there are authorities to the contrary.⁵ Unless a statute inflicts a severer punishment for a subsequent offense, an indictment alleging a prior conviction is bad, however,⁶ since such an allegation, where unnecessary cannot be considered merely as surplusage.⁷ Such an allegation, where required, is not a charge of a distinct offense,⁸ and though an essential part of the indictment,⁹ it is not as a rule considered an element of the offense.¹⁰

Such statutes do not make it necessary to allege that the offense charged is the first offense, where such is the case.¹¹

More than one prior conviction can be alleged, though but one is sufficient to bring the accused within the habitual criminal statute.¹²

[a] Necessity for Election.—Though the indictment charges more than one prior conviction, and but one is sufficient to bring the accused within the habitual criminal statute, the prosecutor is not required to elect upon which prior conviction he will stand. People v. Fegelli, 163 App. Div. 576,

(II.) How Averred.—The early rule was that in averring a prior conviction, it was not enough to state that the defendant was convicted on the former indictment, and that the court gave judgment; it should appear what judgment was given on the former indictment.¹³ But the rule requiring the former conviction and judgment to be pleaded at length is entirely abrogated by statutes in some states, it being sufficient thereunder briefly to allege such conviction,¹⁴ technical accuracy in this respect not being required.¹⁵ Nor is the same particularity required as if the party was charged originally with the commission of the offense.¹⁶ It is only necessary to set forth so much of the former proceedings as will intelligently show that the party was indicted, tried, and convicted of an offense or offenses, if there be more than one,¹⁷ provided, in some jurisdictions, that it is also shown 148 N. Y. Supp. 979. Compare, however, Com. v. Payne, 242 Pa. 394, 89 Atl. 559, holding that, though more than one prior conviction can be averred, so that if it appear that the prisoner was not convicted of one of them, the other may be proved, only one conviction can be proved.

[a] It is not necessary that the indictment should state the particular offense upon which the first conviction was based; it is sufficient to allege that it was a felony. Whorton v. Com., 7 Ky. L. Rep. 826.

[b] Where the statute provides (1) that one having been "convicted" of a prior offense shall be punished by a severer punishment upon a subsequent conviction therefor, it is enough to state that the defendant was "convicted," without averring in terms a judgment or sentence. Stevens v. People, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 261. (2) It is otherwise, however, where the statute requires not only a conviction, but a sentence. People v. Ellsworth, 68 Mich. 496, 36 N. W. 236.

[c] The former judgment need not be set forth literally; (1) but the defendant is entitled to a description that will enable him to find the record, to apply for a conviction or reversal, and to make preparation for a trial of the question whether he is a convict. A construction less favorable to him would not be consistent with his constitutional right. State v. Small, 64 N. H. 491, 14 Atl. 727, holding an averment giving the defendant no information of the time, court, or county in which the judgment was rendered, is insufficient. (2) And see Wilde v. Com., 2 Mete. (Mass.) 408, wherein it is said it is "not necessary to set forth the full and entire record of such previous conviction in ex tenso; it is sufficient to set it forth with such particularity as to identify it, and indicate the nature and character of the offense charged, and to set forth the sentence or judgment with so much exactness, as to show that it was such a conviction as brings the convict within the law providing for the addithat such previous convictions were for offenses committed before the commission of that for which the defendant is on trial.¹⁸

It is not sufficient to allege, in the language of the statute, that accused had been previously convicted of "the same offense,"¹⁹ but it must be averred that he had been previously convicted of an offense of like character to that for which he is being tried.²⁰ If the time and place of the former conviction and the court wherein it was had are definitely stated, this will ordinarily be held a good allegation of prior conviction,²¹ provided, in some jurisdictions, that facts are alleged tional punishment sought for by the information."

[d] The law presumes that the former indictment was sufficient, and the conviction and judgment were proper, which presumption lasts until the conviction is set aside by direct proceeding. Conner v. Com., 13 Ky. L. Rep. 403, 16 S. W. 454.

[a] Where the offense in the last indictment is charged to have been committed on a given day, and the dates of the former indictments are also given, this is sufficient to show that the offense was committed after the former indictments. Brown v. Com., 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1582, 61 S. W. 4.

[a] Under a statute providing for an increased penalty upon a second conviction of felony, it is not necessary that the indictment should state the particular offense upon which the first conviction was based; it is sufficient to allege that it was a felony. Whorton v. Com., 7 Ky. L. Rep. 826.

21. State v. Bloomdale, 21 N. D. 77, 128 N. W. 682.

casion of such conviction, at least, should be stated. People v. Buck, 109 Mich. 687, 67 N. W. 982. That they must be stated, see Rand v. Com., 9 Gratt. (Va.) 738, and also Cal. Penal Code, §969, providing that if more than one previous conviction is charged, the date of the judgment upon each conviction must be stated.

[c] Sufficient allegations of prior conviction were made in the following: Ill.—People v. Tierney, 250 Ill. 515, 95 N. E. 447. Ia.—State v. Zimmerman, 83 Iowa 118, 49 N. W. 71. Me.—State v. Paisley, 36 Mont. 237, 92 Pac. 566, distinguishing Com. v. Finn, 120 Ky. 364, 86 S. W. 693 (see note following) on the ground that the charge of a former conviction is held to be a charge of a separate offense in Kentucky, and also because in Com. v. Finn, supra, the indictment failed to state in what courts the defendant had been previously convicted. N. D.—State v. Bloomdale, 21 N. D. 77, 128 N. W. 682. Ohio.—Blackburn v. State, 50 Ohio St. 428, 36 N. E. 18.

[d] Conviction in Foreign State.—In Com. v. Finn, 120 Ky. 364, 86 S. W. 693, it was sought to charge the accused with being an habitual criminal, under a statute providing that every person convicted a third time of a felony, the punishment of which is confinement in the penitentiary, shall be confined in the penitentiary during his life. The charge was based upon prior convictions in other states. It was held insufficient because it did not show either that the acts for which such prior convictions were had were felonies in those states, or the courts in which the convictions took place. The court said: "Good pleading, where sufficient to show that such court had jurisdiction to try the offense.²² The prison to which the defendant was committed need not be charged.²³ It need not be averred in terms that the accused was an habitual criminal.²⁴ Nor need it be alleged that such former convictions have never been vacated.²⁵ But, where the statute describes the former conviction as one from which the accused has been discharged either by pardon or by serving out the sentence, the indictment must allege a discharge.²⁶

The insufficiency of the allegation of a prior conviction does not vitiate the indictment or information as to the main offense charged,²⁷ for a judgment of a court of another state is relied upon, requires that the laws of the state under which the judgment was rendered be pleaded, so as to show the jurisdiction of the court to render the judgment relied upon. It was likewise essential to plead the laws of the states in which the judgments are claimed to have been rendered, so that the trial court in this state may know whether, in point of fact, the convictions, even if had as claimed, were felonies, the punishment of which was by confinement in the penitentiary. Courts of this state do not take cognizance of the statutes and jurisdictions of courts of other states unless pleaded, and they must be pleaded as other facts. Furthermore, appellee was entitled to be notified explicitly what court in each instance it was that it is claimed had convicted him of the offense alleged, that he might meet the charge by proof."

[e] Conclusion.—It is not necessary that each specification of a former conviction of felony should be concluded with the formal contra pacem conclusion, which is required to the entire indictment. Boggs v. Com., 9 Ky. L. Rep. 342, 5 S. W. 307. As to conclusion to an indictment, see supra, VIII, A, 6.

[b] If under the statute a former conviction of petit larceny can only be used to enhance the punishment in a case where he is again charged with petit larceny, an indictment for grand larceny alleging prior conviction of which the accused may nevertheless be tried and convicted.²⁸ Statutes in some states authorize an amendment of a defective averment of prior conviction.²⁹

9. Matters to the Grand Jury Unknown.—Facts not vital to the accusation, but constituting merely matter of fuller description, may be stated in an indictment or information as unknown to the grand jury, if such is the case.³⁰ This was the rule at the common law, as petit larceny is not vitiated thereby, though such allegation is neither necessary nor proper. Myers v. State, 92 Ind. 390; Good v. State, 61 Ind. 69.

[a] If this rule were not adopted, there would frequently be a failure of justice. People v. Nussbaum, 87 Misc. 269, 150 N. Y. Supp. 605.

[b] The rule is stated in Lang v. State, 42 Fla. 595, 28 So. 856, as follows: "It is well settled in criminal pleading that the omission to state some matters of description not essential constituents of an offense, but which are required to be stated, if known, may be excused by an allegation that they were unknown to the indicting grand jury. . . ."

[c] This rule has been applied to the description of property (1) in cases of larceny. Lang v. State, 42 Fla. 595, 28 So. 856. And see the title "Larceny." (2) Thus the following descriptions have been held sufficient: "Two promissory notes for the payment of money, commonly called bank notes, of the Stonington Bank, current money of the state of New York, each of the value of fifty dollars; bank bills of banks to the jurors unknown, and of a number and denomination to the jurors unknown, of the value of six hundred dollars; silver coin, current money of the state of New York, of a denomination to the jurors unknown, of the value of fifty dollars" (Haskins v. People, 16 N. Y. 344); (3) "bank bills, of banks to the jurors unknown, and of a number and denomination to the jurors unknown, of the value of forty-nine dollars" (Quinlan v. People, 6 Park. Crim. [N. Y.] 9; also People v. Dimick, 107 N. Y. 13, 31, 14 N. E. 178, 184); (4) "sundry gold coins, current as money in this commonwealth, of the aggregate value of twenty-nine dollars, but a more particular description of which the jurors cannot give, as they have no means of knowledge" (Com. v. Sawtelle, 11 Cush. [Mass.] 142. And see Fla.—Porter v. State, 26 Fla. 56, 7 So. 145. Kan. State v. McAnulty, 26 Kan. 533. Minn. State v. Taunt, 16 Minn. 109. S. C. *State v. to a fact which could not be learned by the exercise of reasonable diligence and which was not an ingredient of the offense sought to be prosecuted.³¹ The basis of the rule being necessity,³² it has no application to facts known to the grand jury,³³ or which could have been learned by the employment of reasonable diligence.³⁴ According to some authorities this averment must be proved.³⁵ But by other authorities it is held that such an averment is sufficient unless it be shown that the fact was known to the grand jury.³⁶

E. NECESSITY AND MANNER OF CHARGING PARTICULAR MATTERS.

1. Averments as to Defendant.—a. Necessity for.—The indictment must directly and positively charge the commission by the defendant, of the offense which is the subject of the prosecution.³⁷ The

With the ceasing of the necessity ceases the rule. It should not be so used as to withhold unnecessarily from defendants information which in their proper defense they should have." United States v. Aurandt, 15 N. M. 292, 107 Pac. 1064, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1181.

omission, however, of the defendant's name in the accusatory part of the indictment or information, does not render the same fatally defective, where the name appears in the charging part.³⁸ But if it neither names nor refers to the defendant, the indictment or information is bad.³⁹

Where Several Defendants.—If it is sought to indict two persons jointly the indictment should state their names and connect them by the conjunction "and,"⁴⁰ though the omission of the conjunction does not vitiate the indictment where a comma appears between the names wherever the names appear in the indictment.⁴¹

b. How Name Alleged.—(I.) In General.—The rule is well settled that if the true name of the defendant is known, he must be charged by such name.⁴² A person may be properly indicted under a name by which he is generally known and called,⁴³ whether or not dignity of a constitutional right—"that no person shall for the same offense be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb." . . . A compliance in the indictment with the requirement mentioned provides definite record evidence of the identity of the person charged, and thereby affords him protection against future prosecutions for the same offense, or, if, perchance, he should be so prosecuted again, affords him easy, definite and ample proof to support a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict in assertion of the constitutional right." *Axelrod v. [a] Reason.—"Formerly it was held that the surname need not be stated, and the Christian name was required to be stated, out of regard for the

this be his true name. If defendant is known by two or more names, he may be indicted by either name.⁴⁴

(II.) Where Unknown.—If no name for the defendant is known, then he must be otherwise so described that it shall appear what particular person is charged with the commission of the offense.⁴⁵ Accordingly, under such circumstances he may be described in the indictment as a person whose name is to the jurors unknown,⁴⁶ but such allegation must be accompanied by some averment of fact identifying him,⁴⁷ unless a statute provides that his name may be alleged as unknown without further identification.⁴⁸ Notwithstanding this rule, an indictment of the defendant by his surname, with an allegation that his Christian name is unknown to the grand jurors is sufficient.⁴⁹ But religious ceremony of baptism. A person having received a name at his baptism, was not at liberty to change it; and, although he might assume another at his confirmation, still this did not dispense with the first; hence it was held that the Christian name must, in all cases when known, be stated.⁵⁰ People v. Kelly, 6 Cal. 210.

[b] Where a defendant's Christian name has come to be regarded as his surname and he is so known, it is not material that his real surname is different. Rufus v. State, 117 Ala. 131, 23 So. 144, wherein defendant was indicted under name of John Rufus and his real name was John Rufus George.

[a] To name the accused (1) as Mrs. Beaumont (Beaumont v. Dallas, 34 Tex. Crim. 68, 29 S. W. 157), (2) or ——— Mistrot, without alleging his name is unknown (Mistrot v. State, 72 Tex. Crim. 408, 162 S. W. 833) is insufficient, however.

[b] That defendant's true name might have been ascertained by due diligence is not material. Smoke v. State, 87 Ala. 143, 6 So. 143. But see Lyon v. State, 61 Ala. 221. Contra, Geiger v. State, 5 Iowa 484. And see supra, IX, D, 9.

[a] A person may be arrested under a warrant that merely describes his person, the color of his eyes and hair, his complexion, height, weight, etc., where his name is unknown; and he may be indicted and convicted under such a description. Wiggins v. State, 80 Ga. 463, 5 S. E. 503.

[b] To indict the defendant as "John Doe, a Chinese person, whose true name is to the grand jurors aforesaid unknown" with a certain offense is too indefinite. To describe the defendant as above is just as indefinite as if he had been described as "a Chinese person, whose true name is to the grand jurors unknown." United States v. Doe, 127 Fed. 982.

48. Ala. Code, 1907, §7142; Axelrod v. State, 7 Ala. App. 61, 60 So. 959; People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 376, 59 Pac. 772.

49. Wilcox v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 631, 34 S. W. 958, overruling earlier cases to contrary.

[a] Thus to charge the defendant by the name (1) of ——— Skinner, late of a certain county whose Christian name is unknown to the grand jury aforesaid (Skinner v. State, 30 Ala. 524), (2) or to charge defendant by the name of "Levy" and allege his Christian name is unknown (Levy v. State, 16 Ind. 281), (3) or to charge it cannot charge the defendant's name as both known and unknown;⁵⁰ and if his name be alleged to be unknown, when in fact it is known, the variance is fatal.⁵¹

c. Christian Name, Initials and Middle Names.—Upon the principle that every one is presumed to have a Christian name, until the contrary is shown,⁵² the indictment or information must allege the Christian name of the accused,⁵³ unless some reason is shown for not so stating it,⁵⁴ such as that his Christian name is unknown,⁵⁵ and otherwise identify the accused.⁵⁶

Initials.⁵⁷—The certainty required at common law made it necessary to allege the full Christian name of defendant and not merely his initials,⁵⁸ unless it is alleged that his Christian name is unknown to the grand jury otherwise than as laid in the indictment.⁵⁹ or the defendant was commonly known by the initials of his Christian name only,⁶⁰ and this is still the rule in some states,⁶¹ and is the better practice given under name L. J. Jones, whose given name is to the grand jurors unknown (Jones v. State, 11 Ind. 357), is sufficient.

[b] An indictment which sets forth the defendant's Christian name by initials only is subject to plea in abatement, unless it is alleged that the Christian name was unknown to the grand jury otherwise than as laid in the indictment. Jones v. State, 181 Ala. 63, 61 So. 434; Wellborn v. State, 154 Ala. 79, 45 So. 646; O'Brien v. State, 91 Ala. 25, 8 So. 560; Jones v. State, 63 Ala. 27; Lyon v. State, 61 Ala. 224, 229.

tice.⁶² But in other states,⁶³ especially under statutes providing for correction of misnomer,⁶⁴ it is permissible to allege defendant's Christian name by initials without alleging that his full name is unknown. The defendant is sufficiently designated, however, by his initials, where it is further stated that his Christian name is unknown to the grand jury, there being no evidence to show it was known.⁶⁵

An abbreviation of the Christian name of defendant may be used where its use for the full name has been so general and constant that the meaning of the abbreviation is universally understood and is a matter of general knowledge.⁶⁶

Middle Name.—The law knows only one Christian name, and the middle letter forms no part of it, so that its insertion or omission,⁶⁷ or error therein, makes no difference.⁶⁸

d. Additions and Descriptions.—Though in a few states, the English statute of additions, requiring the estate, degree, mystery and place of residence of the defendant to be stated,⁶⁹ has been construed to be a part of the common law of this country,⁷⁰ as a rule, such statute is held to be inapplicable to prosecutions in this country,⁷¹ and where the accused is named, it is not necessary to otherwise describe him,⁷² unless the matter of description constitutes an essential element of the offense.⁷³ Neither is there any necessity to allege the residence of the defendant,⁷⁴ as it is wholly immaterial in fixing the venue of criminal offenses.⁷⁵

If a description be attempted, however, the accused is entitled to be correctly described;⁷⁶ a false statement in this respect, cannot be treated as surplusage, and will be fatal upon proper objection thereto being made,⁷⁷ unless a statute provides, as is sometimes the case, that an indictment shall not be quashed for any omission or misstatement of the title, occupation, or description of the defendant, where the same does not tend to his prejudice.⁷⁸

by one or more names it is not only proper⁸⁵ but desirable and necessary as a matter of description to give the several names by which he was known.⁸⁶ If the true name of the defendant be alleged, the alias becomes immaterial and an error as to it does not vitiate the indictment.⁸⁷ Nor does the use of several aliases render the indictment defective or uncertain.⁸⁸

If defendant is indicted by a fictitious name, and it is further alleged that his true name is unknown, upon the discovery of the true name the record must be amended so as to set forth the true name.⁸⁹

Maroney*, 109 Cal. 277, 41 Pac. 1097, holding that under modern statutes if an indictment be read to the jury charging defendant with the commission of a crime under several aliases, the defendant is prejudiced and if such an indictment were so framed without reason, its reading would prevent the defendant from obtaining a fair and impartial trial, but where the indictment charges prior convictions of crime under different names, for the purpose of identifying him as the person who had suffered those convictions the use of the alias is not only permissible but proper and is not prejudicial where read to the jury.

[a] An indictment against "Ernest Schraubstadter and Emile A. Groezinger, doing business in the city and county of San Francisco under the firm name and style of A. Finke's Widow, hereinafter called the defendants," shows an intentment to indict the defendants personally, and not the firm as a firm. The recitation "doing business" in San Francisco, etc., is but descriptive of the persons composing the firm and it would be exceedingly technical to hold that such an indictment was an indictment of the firm, and not of the persons composing it. An indictment so drawn will be treated as an indictment of the individual members of the firm, and not of the firm under its firm name. Schraubstadter v. United States, 199 Fed. 568; *State v. corporation existing under the laws of a specified state is all that is necessary to describe the corporation.⁹⁴ There is no necessity for alleging the time and place when and where its existence commenced.⁹⁵

g. *Misnomer and Errors in Spelling of Names.*⁹⁶—While if there is a material variance between the name of the defendant as alleged and the proof, the variance is fatal,⁹⁷ slight departures from the true name of defendant are immaterial, so long as they are idem sonans.⁹⁸ The question whether one name is idem sonans with another is not always a question of spelling, but of pronunciation, depending less upon rule than upon usage,⁹⁹ in which case it may be a question of fact for the jury.¹ Frequently, however, the similarity or dissimilarity is so pronounced that the question is one for the court,² wherein town of Dedham instead of the inhabitants of town of Dedham was indicted.

[a] In Com. v. Warren, 143 Mass. 568, 10 N. E. 178, it was said: "The province of the court and jury in cases especially when the question is raised by demurrer,² or motion to strike.⁴

Statutes in some states expressly provide that error in the name of defendant shall not vitiate the indictment if it can be understood therefrom that the defendant is named,⁵ and upon the discovery of the error, the proceedings thereafter are taken in the true name of the defendant.⁶

h. Necessity of Repeating Name and Errors in Repetition.—It is not essential that the name of the defendant be constantly repeated throughout the indictment,⁷ though it must be stated wherever necessary for certainty.⁸ When once mentioned in full, it may be abbreviated when it occurs again in the same count or sentence,⁹ or even in subsequent counts,¹⁰ with a reference to the first statement of it, by the words, "said" or "aforesaid."¹¹

The insertion of a wrong name in the formal part of an indictment does not vitiate the same, if properly written in the charging part thereof.¹²

An incorrect designation of the surname of the accused in a single place in an indictment or information does not vitiate it, where it is correctly designated in several other places therein;¹³ especially is this true, when the sentence containing the incorrect name can be treated as surplusage, and sufficient still remains to charge the offense.¹⁴

2. Averments as to Third Parties.—a. Necessity for.—While the names of third persons actually injured by the wrongful acts of the

For example, the accused may be charged with the unlawful possession of burglar's tools, he may adulterate food with intent to sell the same in violation of law, or may keep intoxicating liquors with intent to sell in violation of the prohibitory law, and a charge of an offense of this class may be made without alleging the purpose of the accused to injure any particular person. *State v. sity therefor has been dispensed with by statute.¹⁷ This requirement is based upon the necessity of identifying or giving certainty to the transaction or offense upon which the pleading is based.¹⁸

b. How Name Alleged.—(I) In General.—Less strictness was always required in giving the names of third parties than in giving the names of the accused.¹⁹ Certainty to a common intent is all that is required in such case at common law.²⁰

The general rule is to insert the true name of the party, if known,²¹ but the name by which a person is commonly known may be employed in an indictment, though differing from his true or baptismal name,²²

[a] To charge the name by which

and though his other name be alleged to be to the grand jurors unknown.²³ Where such person has or is known by two or more names, he may be described by either or any one,²⁴ or all of his names.²⁵

The use of a feminine name in an indictment or information sufficiently imports that the person referred to is a female.²⁶ If the third party was an infant child having no name, an indictment alleging such facts is sufficient.²⁷

(II.) Where Unknown.—In case the third party is not known by any name, his name may be alleged to be unknown to the grand jury or the prosecuting attorney as the case may be,²⁸ although the grand jury the third person is commonly known by sufficiently complies with the requirement of a statute providing that the facts constituting the offense must be averred "in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." Langston v. State, 8 Ala. App. 129, 63 So. 38.

[b] An indictment charging deceased's name was "Greek George" is sufficient, though it does not allege his true name to be unknown. People v. Freeland, 6 Cal. 96.

[c] Where the third person is in the indictment referred to by the name he or she is generally known by in the neighborhood where the crime was committed, the fact that the baptismal or true name is otherwise does not show a fatal variance. *State v. [a] Where defendant was charged with the murder of "Ham Jones" there is no fatal variance where it appears that deceased was also known by the name of "Hamp Culbreath." Jones v. State, 63 Ga. 456.

[b] The state may designate the deceased by different names in separate counts, as against a demurrer. Walker v. State, 146 Ala. 45, 41 So. 878.

25. Where the person is described by several of the names by which he is known, the fact that it is not alleged that either of the names mentioned was the person's true name, or that his true name was to the grand jury unknown, does not render the indictment defective. Swain v. State, 8 Ala. App. 26, 62 So. 446.

26. People v. Mansfield, 181 Ill. App. 710.

might have ascertained the name, if they had made the proper inquiry of the witnesses on whose testimony the indictment was found.²⁹

c. Christian Name, Initials, and Middle Names.—The indictment must aver the Christian name of the third party, or allege his Christian name to be unknown.³⁰ Such name need not, however, be set out in full, but it may be alleged by initials,³¹ especially where the person

[a] "That which, from the nature of the case, cannot be alleged, need not be; and it is of frequent occurrence that the name of the person injured is unknown. Justice must not fail, nor the community go unprotected for such cause. If the name is unknown, and it is so averred it need not be proved." Nelms v. State, 84 Ga. 466, 10 S. E. 1087, 20 Am. St. Rep. 377.

[b] Thus the name of the principal need not be given where unknown in an indictment against an accessory. Com. v. Kaas, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 422. And see Dugger v. State, 27 Tex. App. 95, 10 S. W. 763.

[c] No description of such third person need be given. Bradford v. State, 72 Tex. Crim. 76, 160 S. W. 1185, holding an allegation that deceased was a "certain Mexican man" sufficient.

[d] If a third party's name is alleged to be unknown, the state need not prove that it was unknown. Childress v. State, 86 Ala. 77, 5 So. 775; State v. Wilson, 30 Conn. 500, 507.

[e] The inference, in cases where the names of persons to whom it is necessary to refer are not set out in the indictment, is that they are unknown, although this fact is not affirmatively stated in the indictment. Martin v. State, 115 Ga. 255, 41 S. E. 576.

[f] Under a statute making it an offense to sell or remove property on which a lien created by law exists, since it is impossible to ascertain there is a lien on property without knowing or ascertaining there is a person, natural or artificial, in whose favor it exists, the name of the third party must be alleged. To allege the name of such third party was unknown is insufficient. Hill v. State, 78 Ala. 1.

[g] Unknown Person.—An indictment for assault committed upon an unknown person, is sufficient without alleging that such third person was "to the grand jurors" unknown. United States v. Davis, 4 Cranch C. C. 333, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,924.

[a] A party against whom an offense has been committed may be described in an indictment by his initials, by his middle name or first name, or by a nick name, and if the proof establishes with certainty that the name alleged is the one by which he is usually known there will be no variance. People v. McDonald, 178 Ill. App. 159.

[b] Even if it should be held that the full Christian name of a third party necessary to the description of a crime should be given in the indictment, most authorities hold that the

d. Additions and Descriptions.—The statute of additions extended only to the party indicted.³³ Accordingly, neither the official character of the third party,³⁴ nor any other words of addition need be used to describe the third parties where not an essential element of the offense.³⁵ Such terms as Jr. and Sr. need not be employed,³⁶ or when employed need not be proved.³⁷

e. Alias.—The injured person may be designated by an alias,³⁸ and an indictment so designating him is not subject to demurrer because of failure to aver the alias Christian name,³⁹ or to allege that it was unknown to the grand jury.⁴⁰

f. Corporations, Associations and Partnerships.—According to some authorities, the mere averment of a name which may import either a corporation, or a voluntary association, or a simple partnership, is not sufficient;⁴¹ the indictment must further show that such question whether letters are the full Christian name cannot be raised on the indictment alone, without proof. People v. Reilly, 257 Ill. 538, 101 N. E. 54, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1112.

[a] The fact that there are two persons of the same name (1) does not render the indictment defective because they are not distinguished by "Jr." and "Sr." Teague v. State, 144 Ala. 42, 40 So. 312. (2) In King v. Peace, 3 B. & Ald. 579, 5 E. C. L. 334, which was an indictment for an assault upon E. E., and it appeared that there were two persons of the same name, mother and daughter, the indictment was held sufficient, but it did not appear that there was any usual designation of the daughter as junior or younger. (3) But "where there are two persons of the same name, father and son, residing in the same time; and the latter uses a well known addition to his name as "Jr." or "Younger," to differentiate him from his father, an indictment in order to allege any offense committed with him or upon him should connect with his name the ordinary addition which is, by himself and others, used to distinguish him from his father. In the absence of such addition the indictment must be understood to allege the offense to have been committed with or upon the latter. State v. Vittum, 9 N. H. 519; *Rex v. name represents either a corporation, partnership or joint stock company, as the case may be.⁴² But other authorities hold that incorporation need not be alleged,⁴³ especially where the name itself imports a corporation.⁴⁴ It is not necessary, however, to state the names of the shareholders.⁴⁵ If incorporation is not an essential element of the crime it need not be alleged,⁴⁶ but where it is such an element it must be alleged.⁴⁷ It is sufficient to prove a de facto existence, even though incorporation be alleged.⁴⁸ A slight variance between the name alleged and that proved is not fatal.⁴⁹ It is sufficient to allege the name by which the corporation is generally known, though that is not its correct name, where it sufficiently appears what corporation is intended.⁵⁰

Partnerships and Associations.—If the name alleged be that of a partnership,⁵¹ or an association, such as is authorized to own property by the name alleged,⁵² the names of the individuals composing such partnership or association must be alleged, unless such specification is dispensed with by statute.⁵³

Property vested in a body of persons must not be laid as the property of that body,⁵⁴ but should be described as belonging to the indi-

[a] Reason.—This is required in order to negative defendant's ownership, by showing that the property, general or special, against which the crime is charged, is in another. Otherwise it is not shown but that the defendant is a partner and entitled to do, with respect to the partnership property, the precise thing charged against him as a crime. *Emmonds v. viduals composing the company.⁵⁵ An averment that the property involved was the property of a designated "association" without alleging incorporation or such facts as would show that said association could own property by that name, is insufficient.⁵⁶

g. *Misnomer and Errors in Spelling of Names.*⁵⁷ — At common law if a necessary allegation of the name of the third party is erroneous in a material respect,⁵⁸ or the name is alleged to be unknown, when in fact it was actually known,⁵⁹ the defect is fatal. Not every misspelling of the name of a third person, however, whom it may be necessary to mention, will vitiate the indictment, unless the difference causes a material change in the pronunciation or sound of the name.⁶⁰ The

[c] Where the name as written in the indictment may be pronounced (although such may not be the strictly correct pronunciation) in the same way as the name given in the evidence, the variance will not be regarded as fatal, names spelled differently, necessarily sound alike, the court may, as a matter of law, pronounce them to be idem sonans,⁶³ especially where the question arises on demurrer to the pleadings;⁶⁴ but if they do not necessarily sound alike the question whether they are idem sonans is a question of fact for the jury.⁶⁵ When the name of the third party has been once fully and correctly stated in the indictment, a manifest error in the subsequent repetition thereof is not material,⁶⁶ especially where "said" or "aforesaid" is used prior to the subsequent repetition of the name.⁶⁷

Statutes in some states now provide, however, that a misnomer as to third persons is not material, when the indictment is otherwise sufficient to identify the act.⁶⁸ But such a statute does not cure the

Exceptions to General Rule.—To the general rule, there are circumstances constituting exceptions, however,⁷⁷ such as where the instrument or paper is in the possession of the accused,⁷⁸ is lost,⁷⁹ or destroyed,⁸⁰ or for some other reason is not accessible to the grand jury or informant.⁸¹ Likewise, where the documents are so numerous that they

It is a rule also that it is not necessary to set out an instrument in hæc verba, unless it becomes directly the subject-matter or foundation of the indictment.⁸⁶ If it be rather an incident which enhances

Howell*, 64 Fed. 110, wherein the court said: "Even though the reasons for not setting out in hæc verba or describing the instrument or writing more particularly may be legally sufficient, the indictment must still contain such a description of the forged and counterfeit instrument or writing as will sufficiently tend to identify and individualize it, so that the defendant may be advised of the charge against him." In this case, which was a prosecution for attempting to defraud an insurance company, "it was not necessary to incorporate the policy of insurance in the indictment. the punishment, than the foundation of the prosecution, it may be set out according to its legal effect.⁸⁷

Obscene Matter.—Even though the instrument which is the subject of the indictment be obscene, it should be set forth or the reason for its omission be alleged.⁸⁸ Where, however, the instrument is so obscene as to render it improper that it should appear on the record, it need not be set out in hæc verba;⁸⁹ but in such case, a reason for the omis-

[a] "The doctrine to be deduced from the American cases is that the constitutional right of the defendant to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him entitles him to insist, at the outset, by demurrer or by motion to quash, and after verdict, by motion in arrest of judgment, that the indictment shall apprise him of the crime charged with such reasonable certainty that he can make his defense and protect himself after judgment against another prosecution for the same offense; that this right is not infringed by the omission from the indictment of indecent and obscene matter, alleged as not proper to be spread upon the records of the court, provided the crime charged, however general the language used, is yet so described as reasonably to inform the accused of the nature of the charge sought to be established against him; and that, in such case, the accused may apply to the court before the trial is entered upon for a bill of particulars, showing what parts of the paper would be relied on by the prosecution as being obscene, lewd, and lascivious, which motion will be granted or refused, as the court, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, may find necessary to the ends of justice." Rosen v. United States, 161 U. S. 29, 40, 16 Sup. Ct. 480, 40 L. ed. 606.

[b] Reason of Rule.—To require the obscene matter to be set out would be to require that the public itself should give permanency and notoriety to indecency, in order to punish it. Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 2 N. E. 808. To same effect, see: Mass.—Com. v. Holmes, 17 Mass. 336. Mich.—People v. Girardin, 1 Mich. 90. N. Y.—People v. Kaufman, 14 App. Div. 305, 43 N. [a] The usual averment is that the book or paper is so obscene that it would be offensive to the court, and improper to be placed on the records thereof, and that therefore the grand jury did not set it forth in the indictment. *Thomas v. In the former case it could not be more particularly described than it here is without offending decency." State v. Brown, 27 Vt. 619.

[c] It is only necessary to identify the obscene book or publication sufficiently to apprise the defendant of what particular book or publication is intended, and to aver its obscenity, giving as an excuse for not setting forth the obscene matter that it is so gross as to be offensive to the court and improper to be placed upon its records. *People v. dietment need not allege in terms that the instrument is under seal.⁵ The meaning of misspelled words in the instrument or writing may be set forth by innuendo averments.⁶

Introductory Words.—If an exact copy of the instrument be required to be set out, the indictment must undertake and profess to set out the instrument in hæc verba by appropriate language introducing the same;⁷ but there need be no technical form of words for expressing that it is so set forth.⁸

Instrument in Foreign Language.—If the instrument which is the basis of the prosecution is in a foreign language, it must be translated and explained.⁹

c. By Exhibit.¹⁰—While the practice of attaching a copy of an instrument as an exhibit, instead of incorporating it into the body of the indictment, is a very loose and dangerous practice,¹¹ and one not to be encouraged,¹² it seems that it is sufficient as against a demurrer to the indictment.¹³

4. Averments as to Property and Ownership Thereof.—a. Describing Realty.—An indictment or information for an offense which can only be committed in relation to real property must so describe the real property which was the subject of the offense that it can be known or identified,¹⁴ or the indictment will be fatally defective.¹⁵ Certainty to a common intent is necessary.¹⁶ For some offenses, however,¹⁷ the location of the realty need not be specifically described; it is sufficient if it is alleged to be in a given city or town.¹⁸

b. Describing Personalty.—(I.) In General.¹⁹—Personal property in respect to which the offense charged is alleged to have been committed must be particularly described, when the character,²⁰ value²¹ an indictment in this form is presented to the court, we think it would be eminently proper for him on his own motion to refuse to receive it, and to return it to the grand jury with instructions to have it drawn in better form; and we are not now prepared to say that, if the objection were raised by a defendant upon arraignment, by motion to set aside the indictment, the court would not be justified in granting the motion and resubmitting the case to the grand jury. But, as against a demurrer, we can see no principle of law upon which we can hold that an exhibit attached to an indictment, and referred to in it as attached thereto, and marked and expressly made a part thereof, should not be considered a part of the indictment, the same as if incorporated in the body of the pleading."

the indictment may allege that further particulars are to the grand jurors unknown.³² The truthfulness of such excuse becomes a matter in issue, in such case, which must be proved.³³

With respect to notes, checks and other writings, the name or designation by which they are commonly known is sufficient without a more particular description under some statutes.³⁴

(III.) Degree of Certainty.—While the property should be described with reasonable certainty, certainty to a common intent is sufficient,³⁵ which is construed to mean such certainty as will enable the jury to say whether the thing proved is the same as that upon which the indictment is founded.³⁶ The description need not be so minute as

[a] An indictment for robbery otherwise sufficient which charges that the defendant feloniously took one twenty-five cent piece of the silver coin of the United States of America, and sixty-five cents lawful money of the United States of America, the particular description of which is otherwise to the grand jury unknown, is not defective for failure to allege a sufficient description of the property or for indefiniteness or for failure to charge that the twenty-five cent piece was lawful money of the United States. Smith v. State, 1 Ala. App. 140, 55 So. 449.

Any words of description which make clear to the common understanding the articles in respect to which the offense is charged, are sufficient.³⁹ It is not sufficient, however, to merely charge the property with respect to which the offense is alleged to have been committed as the "personal property,"⁴⁰ or the "goods" of a designated person.⁴¹ But only such a description is necessary as the circumstances of the case will permit,⁴² and where a particular description cannot be given it is sufficient to describe the property generally and allege that a more particular description is unknown to the grand jury.⁴³ Such an allegation is material and must be proved as laid where there is no sufficient description of the property.⁴⁴ The descriptive words are taken in their common and ordinarily accepted meaning.⁴⁵

(IV.) Value.—While the value of the property which is the subject-matter of the crime need not be alleged where not an essential element of the offense,⁴⁶ or where the statute which is violated merely requires the offense to be committed in relation to property of value,⁴⁷ if value is an essential element of the offense charged, it must be alleged.⁴⁸ Thus, if value affects or determines the punishment to be inflicted,⁴⁹ or the degree of the offense⁵⁰ it must be specifically alleged.

Where several articles, all of one kind, are described, their value may be alleged in the aggregate or collectively,⁵¹ but where articles of different kinds are the subject of the offense, the value of each different kind should be stated, not merely the collective value of the whole.⁵² Money need not be alleged to be of any particular value where it is alleged to be currency or money of the United States, as the court will take judicial notice that it is of a commercial value equal to that imported on its face.⁵³ Where the decimal point is used in figures stating the value, the omission of the dollar sign does not vitiate the indictment.⁵⁴

c. Ownership.—If the ownership of the property involved in the offense is not an element of the crime, it need not be alleged.⁵⁵ In some crimes against property, however, ownership is a material fact,

Manner of Alleging Ownership.—In charging ownership no particular words need be used.⁶² Ownership of personal property is usually alleged by using the words "of the moneys of" the owner, or "of the property of," or "of the goods and chattels of" a designated person.⁶³ The words "belonging to" are sufficient.⁶⁴ Generally it is sufficient to aver the ownership of the property involved in the actual possessor, though he is not the actual owner,⁶⁵ and this is expressly so provided by statute in some states.⁶⁶ And if the offense be one against the possession alone ownership should be alleged in the person or persons in actual possession rather than in the owner.⁶⁷ Accordingly it is ordinarily sufficient to charge ownership in a bailee,⁶⁸ in a sheriff in possession under attachment proceedings,⁶⁹ in a conditional purchaser,⁷⁰ or in a purchaser in good faith from one who had no title,⁷¹ in the occupant or tenant of the house or building,⁷² or in the husband though the legal title of the land be in the wife, where both reside upon the premises and occupy it as a home,⁷³ or where the husband has possession of the wife's personality.⁷⁴ Ordinarily, however, in those states where the wife's ownership is complete and independent of the husband, the ownership of the wife's property should be alleged in the wife,⁷⁵ unless the offense is against the possession, in which case ownership may be laid in either the husband or wife.⁷⁶

Statutes sometimes provide that where the property is the separate property of a married woman, the ownership may be alleged in her or her husband.⁷⁷ In case the owner of personal property is dead, ownership thereof should be alleged in his personal representative,⁷⁸ or in the estate,⁷⁹ or the heirs;⁸⁰ but the ownership of realty should be alleged to be in the heir or devisee.⁸¹

Joint Owners.—Some statutes provide that if property is owned in common or jointly by two or more persons, the ownership may be alleged to be in all or either of them.⁸²

Corporations.—An allegation of ownership in a corporation of a designated name is sufficient⁸³ without showing whether it is a foreign or domestic corporation.⁸⁴ Alleging ownership in one of its agents is not sufficient, however.⁸⁵

Partnership.—While at common law it was necessary in charging offenses against the property of a partnership, to allege ownership in the partnership,⁸⁶ and to allege the names of the individuals composing the firm, for otherwise it is not shown that the defendant is not one of the partners,⁸⁷ under statutes providing that an erroneous allegation as to the name of the owner of the property is not material where the offense is sufficiently described otherwise, an error as to the names of the partners is immaterial.⁸⁸ Indeed, the names of the partners need not be alleged under such statute.⁸⁹ Ownership in one of several partners may be alleged under some statutes.⁹⁰

5. Averments as to Offense. — a. In General. — It is an elementary principle of criminal law that the indictment or information must state that a crime has been committed, either by direct and positive averment in the language of the statute or its equivalent, or by stating facts which show that such crime has been committed by the defendant.⁹¹

Offense Consisting of a Course of Conduct. — If the offense charged is complicated, consisting of a course of conduct, it is not necessary to set out the individual acts constituting the forbidden course of conduct.⁹²

b. Manner or Means of Committing Offense. — At an early date, in capital cases at least, it was held necessary to allege the means by which the offense was committed,⁹³ though in crimes of a lower grade, in order to comply with the constitutional requirement that the accused is entitled to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him;³ and such averment is dispensed with by express provision of statute in some states.⁴

When the means by which an offense was committed are unknown to the grand jury, this fact may be alleged,⁵ even though by proper diligence the grand jury might have learned the nature of the instrument.⁶ Such an allegation is sufficient unless it be shown that the grand jury did know the means used.⁷

Allegations in Alternative.—Statutes sometimes provide that where the crime may be committed by the use of different means, the indictment or information may allege the means in the alternative.⁸ In such case, each alternative averment must be construed as a separate count,⁹ and must describe the means with the same definiteness and particularity, as would have been required, had the charge been made in separate counts.¹⁰

[a] “These words are sufficient to charge guilty knowledge and evil intent. He (accused) could not unlawfully and willfully do the act without knowing the character and quantity of the liquor, and where he was taking it. To allege the one necessarily implies the other, and negatives every excul-

act constituting the offense,²¹ though the statute uses the word "knowingly."²² Likewise, the use of the word "secretly" implies a guilty knowledge.²³

(II.) Intent.—(A.) IN GENERAL.—While a crime cannot be committed unless the person committing the acts supposed to constitute the crime entertains a criminal intent, if the act itself is unlawful without any express reference to any intent, then the only criminal intent involved is the intention to commit the interdicted acts, and it is not necessary to allege such intent, or any intent,²⁴ but this will be presumed from the allegation of the commission of the acts;²⁵ and even if alleged, it is a mere formal averment which need not be proved.²⁶

Whether, in an indictment for a statutory offense, it is necessary to charge a criminal intent is a question of statutory construction.²⁷ If the statute creating the offense is silent as to intent, there need be no intent alleged,²⁸ unless the act itself is not criminal in the absence patory motive." State v. Muller, 80 Wash. 368, 141 Pac. 910.

[a] To illustrate the application of the rule take the case of an indictment for an assault with an intent to commit a rape. The act not being consummated, the gist of the offense consists in the intent with which the assault was committed. It must therefore be distinctly alleged and proved. But in an indictment for the crime of rape, no such averment is necessary. It is sufficient to allege the assault, and that the defendant had carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will. The averment of the act includes the intent and proof of the commission of the offense draws with it the necessary inference of the criminal intent. The same is true of indictments for assault with intent to kill, and murder. In the former the intent must be alleged and proved. In the latter, it is only necessary to allege and prove the act. King v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2661, 2664, 98 Eng. Reprint 398.

[b] Defect of Form.—Though statute makes an assault with an intent to rob the mails punishable, an indictment charging the assault, was wilful, but not alleging the assault was with intent to rob the mails, while bad on demurrer is good on motion in arrest of judgment as being matter of form only. Downing v. United States, 8 Ariz. 31, 68 Pac. 555.

an accessory before the fact to a crime requiring a specific intent must allege that the acts of the accused were done with the required intent.³⁴

(B.) HOW MADE. — An intent cannot be described like a physical, tangible fact, and therefore all that need be done is to characterize by appropriate words the intent essential to the existence of the particular offense charged;³⁵ and some statutes expressly provide that a general averment of the intent is sufficient.³⁶ It is not necessary, however, in offenses in which the intent constitutes the aggravation material to the punishment prescribed that the facts be alleged with the same particularity as where the prohibition of the statute is directed against the doing of an act which is made criminal.³⁷ If the intent is described in the statute by different terms stated disjunctively the indictment may use all of such terms conjunctively,³⁸ or may use either of the qualifying words alone;³⁹ but statutes in some states authorize such intents to be alleged in the alternative.⁴⁰

(III.) Feloniousness. — At the common law, the use of the word "feloniously" or its equivalent in charging a felony, was indispensable

[a] "Indictments for felony must contain the word 'feloniously,' . . . not that it is of any aid or benefit to a defendant, but because it is of long usage, coming down from a remote past, when there was a reason for its use which has long ago ceased." State v. Holder, 153 N. C. 606, 69 S. E. 66.

[b] In State v. Murphy, 17 R. I. 698, 24 Atl. 473, 16 L. R. A. 550, the court says: "We understand the rule of pleading in criminal cases to be, that in the absence of any statutory provision as to what constitutes a felony, or as to the form of the indictment, the word 'feloniously' should be used in all cases where the offense charged was felony at the common law, and that in all other cases said word is not essential; but if used by the pleader it may be rejected as surplusage."

[c] An indictment charging one with aiding and abetting (1) another in an assault with intent to kill is insufficient under these authorities where it fails to charge that the defendant was "feloniously" present, aiding and abetting the felony, alleged to have been committed. State v. Hang Teng, 115 Mo. 389, 22 S. W. 381. (2) Com-

statute to a felony, whereas it was only a misdemeanor at common law;⁴³ otherwise the acts charged will only be a misdemeanor or trespass.⁴⁴ and if no misdemeanor be included in the description of the felony charged, and the word "feloniously" be omitted, the indictment is insufficient for any purpose.⁴⁵ This principle, however, does not obtain where the statute otherwise expressly provides,⁴⁶ as it does in some states.⁴⁷

The authorities seem to be in conflict also as to the necessity of averring that the acts were feloniously done, where the offense is one created by statute, and the word "feloniously" is not used therein,⁴⁸ some holding in such case that the word "feloniously" need not be used if the indictment or information describes the offense in the language of the statute or the statutory form provided,⁴⁹ others adhering

[a] In State v. Clayton, 100 Mo. 516, 13 S. W. 819, 18 Am. St. Rep. 565, the court said: "The making of an assault like the one under discussion is not a new offense created by statute; it was an offense at common law; but was only—a misdemeanor. 1 East P. C. 411. The grade of the offense, however, having been raised to a felony, the common-law rules as to charging felonies must apply, and the act charged like any other felony originating at common law."

[b] But it is not necessary (1) that the word "feloniously" be used where a statute exists providing that indictments for misdemeanors good at common law are good under a statute raising the offense to a felony. Peck v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 78. (2) But see Wile v. State, 60 Miss. 260; Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 570, both holding that a statute providing that where any act is criminal, both by statute and at common law, it may be set out in an indictment in either the statutory or common-law form, does not apply in a case where the act charged was a misdemeanor at common law and a felony by statute, in which case it must

to the rule that the word or its equivalent must be used in such case.⁵⁰ It is not necessary to repeat, in connection with each act necessary to constitute the offense charged, that the defendant did it "feloniously."⁵¹ It is sufficient where this word becomes a component part of the subsequent allegations.⁵² Obviously the word "feloniously" need not be used in a charge of a misdemeanor.⁵³ Indeed, its use in such case, renders the pleading fatally defective in some jurisdictions,⁵⁴ though the better rule is to the contrary.⁵⁵ And where unnecessarily alleged, if not descriptive of the identity of what is legally essential to the charge, it may be disregarded.⁵⁶ that the acts charged were "feloniously" done,⁶² or it must show that the injury inflicted was unlawfully done.⁶³ But where the statute creating the offense does not use the word "unlawfully" in defining the offense,⁶⁴ or the statute defining the offense uses such term unnecessarily because it describes a crime existing at common law, and manifestly illegal,⁶⁵ there is no necessity for alleging the acts were done unlawfully. Neither is it necessary to add the term "unlawfully" to the description of the alleged offense where enough is shown to make it manifestly illegal.⁶⁶

If the act charged is not unlawful or was not unlawfully done, an allegation that it is unlawful or was unlawfully done does not render it indictable.⁶⁷ Charging an act as being "unlawfully" done where there is no necessity therefor does not vitiate the indictment.⁶⁸

Taylor*, 93 Ky. 394, 29 S. W. 138, holding that where the statute uses the words "wilfully and knowingly," it was not sufficient to use, "unlawfully and feloniously," the word, "feloniously" not having the legal significance of either the word wilfully or knowingly, or of both. N. H.—State v. Gove, 34 N. H. 510, holding that where a statute makes criminal the doing of an act "wilfully and maliciously," it is not sufficient for the indictment to charge that it was done "feloniously and unlawfully," or "feloniously, unlawfully, and wilfully," these terms not being synonymous, equivalent, of the same legal import, or substantially the same as "wilfully and maliciously." Wis.—State v. Delue, 2 Pinn. 204, holding that under a statute which defines the offense to consist in "wilfully and maliciously killing," etc., it is not sufficient to charge that the killing was "felonious, unlawful, and malicious."

[b] An indictment charging (1) that the killing was "unlawfully, feloniously, of his malice aforethought, with deliberation and premeditation" charges the killing was wilful. Harding v. State, 94 Ark. 65, 126 S. W. 90. (2) So also an indictment charging that an assault to have been made "unlawfully and feloniously, with malice aforethought, and after premeditation and deliberation, charges that it was "wilful." Halley v. State, 108 Ark. 224, 158 S. W. 121.

[c] The word "recklessly" (1) is not the same as "wilfully," however. Thurman v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. 718, 104 Pac. 67, wherein the court said: "The word 'wilfully' when employed in penal statutes is used as a synonymous term with 'intentionally' or 'designedly,' or 'without lawful excuse.' The word 'recklessly' means heedlessly, carelessly, or indifferent to consequences, without contemplating or intending those consequences. As a general rule, there is a wide difference between intentional acts and those results which are the consequences of recklessness or carelessness." (2) Nor is the word "unlawfully," used alone, sufficient where the word "wilfully" is required. State v. Hussey, 60 Me. 410, 11 Am. Rep. 206; Morrow v. State, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 120.

74. Toler v. Com., 94 Ky. 529, 23 S. W. 347.

(VII.) Malice.—If certain acts are punishable as an offense only when maliciously done, the indictment or information must charge such acts to have been done “maliciously” or with malice.⁷⁵ To charge that the acts were done unlawfully,⁷⁶ or wilfully,⁷⁷ is not sufficient; the word “feloniously” embraces the word “maliciously,” however, and an indictment using the same is sufficient, though omitting the word “maliciously.”⁷⁸ But an act need not be charged to have been maliciously done, when malice is not an element of the offense.⁷⁹

A clerical error in spelling the word “maliciously” in charging that the act was so done will not vitiate the pleading.⁸⁰

78. Aikman v. Com., 13 Ky. L. Rep. 894, 18 S. W. 937, holding that in an indictment for arson it was sufficient to charge that the offense was done “feloniously and wilfully.” And see Johns v. State, 88 Neb. 145, 129 N. W. 247 (holding that an information charging the defendant with wilfully, feloniously, burglariously and feloniously breaking and entering into a slaughter house, with the intent to take, steal, and carry away certain described personal property, is equivalent to charging the defendant with malice, and the absence of the word “maliciously” did not vitiate it); Whitman v. State, 17 Neb. 224, 22 N. W. 459, holding the words “unlawfully, wilfully, purposely and feloniously” sufficient though “maliciously” was omitted. But see State v. Gove, 34 N. H. 510, holding that use of “feloniously and unlawfully” or “feloniously, unlawfully and wilfully” insufficient where statute uses words “wilfully and maliciously.”

on any day prior to that laid is proper.⁸⁴ Exceptions to this rule are where a day is averred by way of describing a written instrument, record, or the like, or where time enters into the nature of the offense. In these cases, the allegations and proof must correspond.⁸⁵

Statutes in most of the states now dispense with this particularity of statement by providing that unless time is an essential ingredient of the offense, the indictment shall not be quashed, or deemed invalid for want of an allegation as to the time of the commission of the offense,⁸⁶ or for an imperfect statement of the time,⁸⁷ or dispense with averments as to the exact time of the commission of the offense, unless time is a material element thereof,⁸⁸ it being sufficient under such [a] Ordinarily, upon the trial of a cause the proof need not show the commission of the offense at the time alleged by the indictment. It is only in particular cases that the law so requires. At the trial, the averment of a date means any time within the statute of limitations, and the subsequent reference "then and there" means at any such time and at any place within the county. In determining the sufficiency of the indictment, however, the court is to take the date alleged as the true one. Dreyer v. People, 176 Ill. 590, 52 N. E. 372.

(II.) When Time Must Be Alleged.—If the time of the commission of the offense is not an element of the offense and there is no statute of limitations against the prosecution of the offense, time is not material and need not be alleged at all.⁹³ But when the time becomes material as constituting an element of the crime,⁹⁴ such as when the acts charged are criminal only when done on a particular day or date,⁹⁵ or a day is averred by way of describing a written instrument or record,⁹⁶ or the time stated in the indictment is to be proved by matter of record, as in perjury,⁹⁷ the date must be accurately alleged.

If certain acts are criminal only when committed within a certain period of the year, the averment of a date within such period is suffi-

[a] A marked distinction exists in the matter of pleading dates between those cases where a particular day is of the essence of the offense, as if a statute should punish an offense committed on Sunday because of an appreciation of its sabbatical quality, or some like relation of the day to the offense, and those cases in which the day is relatively of no materiality. United States v. Howard, 132 Fed. 325, 335.

[b] In cases where indictments are found for selling intoxicating liquors on Sundays, or on the day state elections are held, time is a material ingredient of the crime charged, and the indictment must charge, and the proof show, that those crimes were committed on Sundays or on election days, as the case may be. State v. Goddard, 69 Ore. 73, 133 Pac. 90, 138 Pac. 243. See the title "Intoxicating Liquors." precise date charged in the indictment material by giving notice that his defense includes an alibi. State v. Goddard, 69 Ore. 73, 133 Pac. 90, 138 Pac. 243.

[d] Where a statute defines "night-time," it is sufficient to allege, generally, that an offense was committed in the night time, without stating the particular hour of the night. Com. v. Williams, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 582.

[b] Though the day of the month be erroneously alleged, an indictment charging the sale of liquor on Sunday is sufficient. Marquardt v. State, 52 Ark. 269, 12 S. W. 562; Hoover v. State, 56 Md. 584.

(III.) Showing Commission Prior to Finding of Indictment or Filing of Information.—The time of the commission of the offense must be shown to be prior to the return of the indictment or filing of the information,⁹⁹ though a distinct allegation to this effect is not necessary where the facts alleged show the offense was committed prior thereto,¹ even though the date alleged be the date of the filing of the indictment.²

The statement of a date subsequent to the finding of the indictment does not vitiate the indictment under the modern statutes where the other facts show that it relates to a past transaction and the insertion of the date was a clerical error,³ and especially is this true where it is afterward charged in express terms the offense was committed before the finding of the indictment.⁴

the statutory period of limitation, if there is a statute applicable to such offense;⁶ but there is no necessity for an express allegation to that effect where the date alleged shows the offense to have been committed within the statutory period.⁷ If the indictment charges two dates, one within and the other beyond the period of limitations, the indictment is bad.⁸ If an exception is relied upon to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations, it must be alleged.⁹

[a] Where time is a material element of the offense and the offense is alleged as of a date when there was no statute penalizing the acts, the date specifically alleged must be taken to be the true date when the alleged acts were committed and the prosecution cannot prove commission of the offense at another date. Thorp v. Smith, 64 Fla. 154, 59 So. 193.

of limitations for that class of offenses,¹² or the punishment for an offense has been materially changed within such period,¹³ time is an ingredient of the offense and it must be shown that the offense was committed after the change in the law. This may be done by alleging the date of the commission of the offense as of a date subsequent to the enactment of the statute,¹⁴ or by stating that the prohibited acts were committed subsequent to the passage of the law.¹⁵ For the same reason, an indictment charging the commission of the offense within a period beginning at a date anterior to the enactment of the statute and extending beyond the date of its passage must aver the commission of the offense subsequent to the enactment of the statute,¹⁶ though there is authority that an indictment averring the commission of the offense over a period commencing anterior to the enactment of the statute is good without such an averment.¹⁷

[a] "When a statute makes an act punishable from and after a given day, the time of the commission of the act is an essential ingredient of the offense, to the extent that it must be alleged to have been after such day. So if a statute changes the punishment of an existing offence by imposing a severer penalty, with a clause saving from its operation offences already committed, the allegation of time is material. The nature and character of the offence, and the penalty affixed to it depend upon the time when the act charged is committed. If in such a case an indictment alleges the act to have been committed before the passage of the statute enlarging the penalty, the offence charged and the punishment annexed to it are different from the offence and punishment, if the act is committed after such time. They are different offences, and an allegation of one is not sustained by proof of the other. Otherwise the defendant would be exposed to a greater punishment upon a trial than he would be upon a plea of guilty." Com. v. Maloney, 112 Mass. 283.

as the statutes are not applicable to such cases,³⁸ though upon motion in arrest of judgment such defect is not fatal and the error is disregarded under the statutes requiring the court to disregard technical errors not prejudicing the defendant's substantial rights.³⁹

Under the statutes providing that an indictment is good if it can be ascertained therefrom that the offense was committed prior to the finding of the indictment, though it alleges the commission of the offense at a future date, it is good where time is not an ingredient of the offense and its commission is alleged in the past tense,⁴⁰ or it is alleged in terms to have been committed prior to the finding of the indictment.⁴¹ So too, the averment of two dates, one of which is a future date, does

[b] If a future date be alleged, the error is not cured by an order amending the record so as to show that the leave to file the information was given at a later date where there was no amendment of the information. People v. Weinstein, 255 Ill. 530, 99 N. E. 589.

[d] Where true time of finding of indictment appears by signature and indorsement of foreman, the fact that it appears upon its face to have been found at a term of court prior to the date upon which it is alleged the offense was committed is an irregularity, not invalidating the indictment, nor authorizing its quashal. not make the indictment bad, under statutes providing that the appellate court must disregard technical errors or defects which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties.⁴²

Statutes in some states expressly provide that the indictment shall not be invalid because alleging the commission of the offense at a future,⁴³ or impossible date.⁴⁴

Blank Date.—In the absence of statute, to charge the commission of the offense on a blank day, month and year renders the indictment fatally defective as it does not appear in such case that the offense was committed within the period of limitations.⁴⁵ The same is true where only the year is left blank,⁴⁶ or the day and month are left blank and the year alone is stated, where any part of the year alleged falls beyond the period of the statute of limitations applicable to the offense charged.⁴⁷ But if the month and year are stated and the day alone is left blank; and the day is not of the essence of the offense, the defect is not fatal if the year and month are within the statute of limitations.⁴⁸

Under the modern statutes, however, dispensing with averments as to the time of commission of the offense except where time is an

(D.) WHERE SERIES OF ACTS CONSTITUTE THE OFFENSE. — Some offenses require a more extended allegation of the time within which they were committed than merely to state a particular date, as where a series of acts may enter into and constitute the offense.⁵⁵ Statutes sometimes provide in such case for an allegation of the commission of the acts or offense during a given period of time next before the finding of the indictment.⁵⁶ Ordinarily, however, all offenses involving a series of acts or continuous action and which may be continued from day to day, may be charged as committed upon one particular date and on divers other days between such date and another date.⁵⁷ It may charge

(II.) Manner of Alleging Place of Commission.—(A.) IN GENERAL. The indictment must be certain to a reasonable extent as to the venue.⁸⁰ Notwithstanding a defective allegation of venue, under some statutes it is sufficient if it appears therefrom that the offense was committed within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.⁸¹ If a statute prescribes a form of alleging venue, it is sufficient to follow such statutory form,⁸² and an immaterial variance therefrom will not vitiate the indictment.⁸³ To aver the commission of the crime within the jurisdiction of the court is not sufficient.⁸⁴

Organization of New County or Attachment of One County to Another for Judicial Purposes.—Upon the organization of a new county covering the locality where the crime was committed, after the commission of the offense the venue of the offense is properly laid in the new county³¹ without specifically stating that when the offense was committed the territory belonged to another county.¹ Where a county has been attached by statute to another county for judicial purposes, the indictment should allege the commission of the offense in the county where committed, and not in the county in which triable.²

Offense Begun in One County, Completed in Another.—If the offense consists of several acts and some of the acts are done in one jurisdiction and other acts completing the offense in another jurisdiction, an indictment therefor should lay the venue according to the facts of the case,³ but statutes sometimes provide that where an offense commences in one county and terminates in another the person offending may be prosecuted in either county,⁴ or provide that where property is stolen act depends upon the place where it is committed, the allegation of place is material and forms an essential element of the offense and must be described with sufficient certainty to enable the defendant to prepare his defense.¹³

If the location of the building or outhouse is material the usual manner of alleging the location thereof is to refer to the building in connection with a place already described as being "there situate,"¹⁴ but the omission thereof is not fatal to the indictment.¹⁵ If the place is material, the place alleged in the venue, taken in connection with the allegation that the defendant then and there did the act sufficiently designates the locality of the building. It is equivalent to an allegation that the buildings were situated at the venue alleged.¹⁶

are stated in the caption,⁴¹ the commencement⁴² or margin of the indictment,⁴³ it is sufficient thereafter to refer in the body of the indictment to the venue in the margin, caption or commencement by such words as "then" and "there" and "in the county aforesaid."⁴⁴ And by statute in some states, if the proper venue is stated in the caption or margin, it need not be set out in the body of the indictment.⁴⁵

f. Charging Statutory Offenses.—(I.) In General.—It is well settled that an indictment or information charging a purely statutory offense must be framed upon the statute defining that offense,⁴⁶ which fact must appear upon the face of the pleading itself.⁴⁷

That caption may aid indictment, see supra, VIII, A. 3.

[a] Where the name of the county is in the caption, an indictment charging the commission of the offense "in the county and state aforesaid" sufficiently charges venue. State v. Hunn, 34 Ark. 321. And see Winegardner v. State, 181 Ind. 525, 104 N. E. 969.

[b] Though caption gives the state and court, but omits the county, and the indictment alleges the commission of the offense "in the county aforesaid," the allegation is sufficient where from the preceding matter it can be understood what county is referred to. Eaves v. State, 113 Ga. 749, 39 S. E. 318.

[c] County Blank.—The averment in the information or indictment that the crime was committed in "said county of _____" should and may reasonably be construed to refer to the county mentioned in the caption as the name or title of the court, and, so construing it, the venue is sufficiently established in the accusatory pleading to invest the court with jurisdiction of the offense and of the person of the accused. *People v. element of the crime is omitted,⁵¹ or if the indictment may be true, and still the accused may not be guilty of the offense described in the statute,⁵² it is not valid. But if the offense as declared by statute is essentially the same as the common law description thereof, an indictment following either the statute or the common-law form is sufficient.⁵³ When challenged, however, the indictment must be sufficient, according to the one or the other standard.⁵⁴

If the crime charged existed at common law, and is denounced by name only by statute, then the indictment must contain averments covering the common-law ingredients.⁵⁵ And the same is true where the statute merely prescribes the punishment for a common-law offense without making any change in the nature or character of the offense itself.⁵⁶

[b] Common-Law Offense.—An indictment which fails to allege facts showing that a statute has been violated cannot be upheld as charging a violation of common law in states where there are no common-law offenses. People v. Knapp, 206 N. Y. 373, 99 N. E. 841, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 243, affirming 147 App. Div. 436, 132 N. Y. Supp. 747.

have supposed that the offense charged was covered by a different statute, or section thereof,⁵⁷ or may elect to prosecute under another statute under which the indictment is not good.⁵⁸ The mere fact that the facts charged as constituting a crime might have been punished under another statute than that under which the prosecution is brought does not make it obligatory upon the prosecution to charge under one statute rather than another.⁵⁹

(II.) Reference to Statute. — An indictment for an offense created by a public statute need not state specifically, by particular reference thereto, the statute violated by the acts alleged to be a crime,⁶⁰ it being sufficient to charge the offense against the form of the statute.⁶¹ Where there are several sections of the statute under which the accused is prosecuted, the same uniformity in the rule does not exist, however; in some states, it is not even necessary to allege the particular section under which the charge is made,⁶² it being enough to allege facts plainly showing that an offense has been committed.⁶³ Under other authorities, however, the indictment or information should show the particular provision of the statute relied upon by the prosecution as constituting the offense which the defendant is accused of violating.⁶⁴

A private statute, as distinguished from a public statute, must be pleaded in the indictment or information, if it constitutes an essential element of the offense sought to be charged.⁶⁵

No statement of the time of the passage of the statute is necessary in referring to it.⁶⁶

How Made.—Where a reference is necessary, as in case of a private statute, it is sufficient if the statute is set forth by chapter and date and its material provisions incorporated therein.⁶⁷ It is properly described as an "act of the legislature" of the state of venue, without alleging its enactment by the technical designation of that body.⁶⁸

Whenever a reference to a designated section of a statute is made, it must be understood as referring to a section then in force.⁶⁹ But the omission of the indictment to refer to the latest revision of the statutes cannot be regarded as a failure to charge defendant with the commission of an offense against a known law.⁷⁰

Effect of Mistakes in Making.—Though there be a misrecital of a public statute, not necessary to have been recited or referred to, if the indictment concludes "contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided," without referring to the recited statute, the recital may be rejected as surplusage.⁷¹ It is otherwise if the statute is re-

[a] But see United States v. Goodwin, 20 Fed. 237, wherein the court said: "In Butler v. State, 3 McCord 383, it was held that an indictment need not recite the statute on which it is founded; but if an indictment professes to do so, a material variance will be fatal; or, if the statute does not support the verdict, it must fail. If there had been no allegations in the indictment as to the law, the indictment might have been sustained; but as these allegations make it quite evident that the finding of the grand jury was upon a law which had been repealed, I think that judgment must be arrested."

ferred to in the conclusion as the "said statute."⁷² Since a statement of the time when the statute was passed need not ordinarily be made,⁷³ a mere clerical error in a statement as to the date thereof will not vitiate an indictment or information where facts sufficient to constitute an offense are set forth therein,⁷⁴ especially where it is obvious that the defendant could not be prejudiced thereby.⁷⁵ It is otherwise, however, in case the facts constituting the offense are not set forth except by reference to the statute.⁷⁶

(III.) Following Language of Statute.—(A.) MUST EXACT WORDS BE FOLLOWED.—Not only is it generally sufficient to charge a statutory offense in the language of the statute defining the same,⁷⁷ or in language substantially the same or equivalent thereto,⁷⁸ but it is necessary that it be so charged.⁷⁹ The more appropriate and safer practice, of course, is to use the words of the statute, rather than to undertake to substitute others of equivalent meaning.⁸⁰

There is authority, indeed, though principally under the earlier cases, to the effect that the exact words of the statute must be pursued in charging such an offense.⁸¹ But the rule is now well settled, by express provision of statute in some states, that words used in a statute to define an offense need not be strictly pursued; but other words substantially the same, of like import, or equivalent thereto, may be used,⁸² unless the words used are the technical words which con-

[a] "A distinction is to be drawn between charges which are violations of purely statutory offenses and those cases which were penalized under the common law. Naturally, where the offense is statutory, the language of the accusation must follow more closely the language of the statute, and be restricted by it more, than where the charge relates to a common-law offense, in which the details must necessarily be amplified in order to cover the definition of the common law offense." *Youmans v. Mueller, 85 Wis. 203, 55 N. W. 165. Can.—Queen v. Weir, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 102, words of equivalent import sufficient.

[a] "Every indictment or information is sufficient and good in law which charges the crime substantially in the language of the statute, subject only to those provisions of the national and state constitutions designed for the protection of life, liberty, and property." Stoltz v. People (Colo.), 148 Pac. 865.

[b] The pleader is at liberty to use any form of expression, provided only that he thereby fully and accurately describes the offense; and the entire indictment is to be considered in determining whether the offense is fully stated. Dunbar v. United States, 156 U. S. 185, 15 Sup. Ct. 325, 39 L. ed. 390.

[d] But no word which is narrower than that used in the statute, or which has not its full signification, will suffice. Sparrenberger v. State, 53 Ala. 481, 25 Am. Rep. 643, holding word shop "not equivalent to store."

[e] Dangerous Practice.—While "equivalent words may be used in lieu of the statutory description of the offense, yet it is dangerous as tending not only to material inaccuracy in substance, but also to irregularity in matters of form." State v. Riffe, 10 W. Va. 794.

[f] The following have been held to be equivalent words or phrases: (1) embezzle and fraudulently convert to his own use (Teston v. State, 50 Fla. 137, 142, 39 So. 787), (2) "house" and "store-room," in indictment for gaming, under statute making it offense to game in any "house" (McGaffey v. State, 4 Tex. 156), (3) by "nature of" employment and "by reason of" employment (Strobhar v. State, 55 Fla. 167, 47 So. 4), (4) "notes of the bank" and "bank-notes" (State v. Vanderlip, 4 La. Ann. 444), (5) "currency of the United States" and "United States currency" (Dull v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 965), (6) "portion" and "part" (Holly v. State, 54 Ala. 238), (7) "store" and "shop" (State v. Moore, 38 La. Ann. 66; State v. Smith, 5

stitute the specific offense,⁸³ or are descriptive of the nature of the offense sought to be charged.⁸⁴ Especially may other words be used, where they are stronger or more extensive in meaning, and inclusive of those used in the statute.⁸⁵ All the words used in the statute need

La. Ann. 340. Contra, Sparrenberger v. State, 53 Ala. 481, 25 Am. Rep. 643), (8) "with malice aforethought" and "with a premeditated design," State v. Seifert, 65 Wash. 596, 118 Pac. 746. (9) The use of the word "get" in place of the word "obtain" in the accusatory or presenting part of an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses is immaterial (Hale v. Com., 151 Ky. 639, 152 S. W. 773), (10) as is the use of phrases, "according to" the laws instead of "under" the law, in prosecution for sale of liquor without license. Skelton v. State, 173 Ind. 462, 89 N. E. 860, 90 N. E. 897.

[g] The use of the word "unlawfully" implies "without authority of law." Fla.—Schley v. State, 48 Fla. 53, 37 So. 518. La.—State v. Holland, 120 La. 429, 45 So. 380. Okla.—Fooshee v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. 666, 108 Pac. 554.

[h] The following have been held not equivalent: (1) the words "with an attempt" and "with an intent" (State v. Marshall, 14 Ala. 411; State v. Martin, 14 N. C. 329), (2) "parent" and "father" (Lantzner v. State, 19 Tex. App. 320), (3) "furnish" and "convey" (Francis v. State, 21 Tex. 280), (4) "use and benefit" and "value" (Jones v. State, 12 Tex. 88, "violently" instead of "forcibly" in rape. La.—State v. Pellerin, 118 La. 547, 43 So. 159; State v. Brown, 41 La. Ann. 345, 6 So. 541, wherein the word "wantonly" was used instead of "willfully." Me.—State v. Lynch, 88 Me. 195, 33 Atl. 978; State v. Robbins, 66 Me. 324. N. J.—State v. Caporale, 85 N. J. L. 495, 89 Atl. 1034, wherein word "defraud" was used for word "prejudice" in indictment based on statute making it offense to procure burning of building "with intent to prejudice any corporation that has underwritten any policy of insurance thereon." N. Y. Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15; People v. Enoch, 13 Wend. 159, 27 Am. Dec. 197. Tenn.—State v. Smith, 119 Tenn. 521, 105 S. W. 68. Tex.—Ex parte Cowden (Tex. Crim.), 168 S. W. 539 (wherein the word "willful" was used instead of "knowingly"); Robinson v. State (Tex. Crim.), 149 S. W. 186; State v. Wupperman, 13 Tex. 33. Utah.—State v. Williamson, 22 Utah 248, 62 Pac. 1022, 83 Am. St. Rep. 780.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) Thus, the words "unlawfully," "willfully," "fraudulently," and "feloniously" in an indictment include the word "wrongfully" (State v. Pellerin, 118 La. 547, 43 So. 159); (2) "unlawfully, willfully, purposely and feloniously" includes "maliciously" (Whitman v. State, 17 Neb. 224, 22 N. W. 459), (3) "feloniously" includes "willfully" (State v. McDaniel, 45 La. Ann. 686, 12 So. 751. Compare supra, IX, E, 5, c), (4) "deadly" includes "dangerous" (State v. Lynch, 88 Me. 195, 33 Atl. 978), (5) "destroy" includes "disable" (Tully v. People, 67 N. Y. 15), (6) and the word "property" includes "corporeal personal property." Sausbury v. State, 4 Tex. App. 99.

[b] A charge in an indictment for perjury that the testimony was "feloniously, falsely and corruptly" given necessarily implies that it was wilfully or intentionally given. Blevins v. State, 85 Ark. 195, 197 S. W. 393.

[c] So, if the word "knowingly" be in the statute, and the word "advisedly" be substituted for it, or the word

not in all cases be used in an indictment.⁸⁶ Nor, on the other hand, are superfluous words, beyond what the statute requires, objectionable.⁸⁷

(B.) SUFFICIENCY OF FOLLOWING LANGUAGE OF STATUTE ALONE.—(1.) In General.—The broad general rule, as usually stated,⁸⁸ is that an indictment or information for a statutory offense, charging the same in “willfully” in the statute, and “maliciously” in the indictment, the words “advisedly” and “maliciously” not being in the statutes respectively, the indictment would be sufficient. State v. Robbins, 66 Me. 324, aff’d 1 Whart. Am. Crim. Law, §376; Rex v. Fuller, 1 Bos. & Pul. (Eng.) 180.

86. Thompson v. Com., 5 Ky. L. Rep. 610; People v. Gregg, 59 Hun 107, 13 N. Y. Supp. 114.

[a] If some ingredient of the offense be plainly in an ellipsis, such must be omitted in the indictment. Bell v. State, 10 Ark. 536.

[b] The omission of words not constituting any part of the description or definition of the offense is not erroneous. Dye v. Com., 7 Gratt. (Va.) 662. And see generally, as to effect of omission of words, supra, IX, C, 2, f.

87. People v. Paul, 167 Ill. App. 557 (which was an information for pandering, and was in the language of the statute, with the words, “persuade and encourage” added and the name of the female interpolated, the court held that “interpolating the name of the person charged to have been procured as an inmate for a house of prostitution, did not operate to change the character of the offense named in the statute”); State v. Cheatwood, 2 Hill (S. C.) 459, wherein the words of the statute were exactly pursued, with the exception that instead of the words “willfully, deliberately and maliciously did murder,” the indictment charges that the prisoner “willfully, deliberately and maliciously, did kill and murder.”

As to effect of surplusage, see generally infra, IX, J, 3.

Cross, 43 Nova Scotia 320.

[a] "In indictments for purely statutory offenses it is sometimes sufficient to charge the offense by using only the words of the statute. This may be done where the language of the statute is so specific as to give notice of the act made unlawful, and so exclusive as to prevent its application to any other acts than those made unlawful." Sullivan v. State, 67 Mass. 345, 7 So. 275.

[b] Thus indictments following the language of the statute (1) for disturbing religious worship (State v. Menard, 12 Ark. 150), (2) or for "indecent exhibition of the person" (State v. Hade, 20 Ark. 150), (3) or charging the "crime against nature" (Hammel the language of the statute, is sufficient; especially is this true, where the words used have a well recognized or technical meaning.⁸⁹ But this general rule is not an absolute and unqualified one;⁹⁰ whether or not it is sufficient to follow the words of the statute depending to some extent upon the manner in which the offense is stated in the statute.⁹¹ Such pleading is sufficient where, and only where, the words of themselves fully, directly and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements constituting the offense intended to be punished;⁹² and the fact that the statute in the question read in the man v. People, 168 Ill. 172, 48 N. E. 364), (4) or for presuming to solemnize a marriage contrary to law (Pearce v. State, 27 Ark. 5, 132 S. W. 986), (5) or charging the offense of aiding a prisoner to escape (People v. Murray, 57 Mich. 396, 24 N. W. 118) have been held sufficient.

[c] It is sufficient to follow the words of a statute making it an offense for "whoever being a male person, frequents or visits a gambling house or houses." State v. Bridgewater, 171 Ind. 1, 85 N. E. 715.

the necessity of alleging in the indictment all the facts necessary to bring the case within that intent.⁹³

It is not sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute alone, where the statute merely designates the offense without stating the elements thereof,⁹⁴ or when recourse must be had to the common words in themselves descriptive of the crime—like assault, rape, and others, it is unnecessary to aver acts done, as such words are always enough to charge the facts indicated by them. State v. Donovan (Del.), 90 Atl. 220.

[b] Other statements of the rule are: (1) "The general rule is that, to render an indictment good by following the language of the statute, it must contain a statement of every fact necessary to constitute the offense. The offense as stated in the statute must be complete in itself." Com. v. Gregory, 121 Ky. 158, 89 S. W. 477. (2) "If every fact necessary to constitute the offense is charged, or necessarily implied by following the language of the statute, an indictment in the words of the statute is sufficient; otherwise it is not." Farrell v. Com., 164 Ky. 599, 175 S. W. 1043.

[c] The rule that an indictment for a statutory misdemeanor is sufficient, if the language of the statute is used in charging the offense, is limited to cases where such words fully set forth all the assignments necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished without uncertainty or ambiguity. *Evans v. law in order to determine the constituent elements of the crime," or if the facts stated are capable of two constructions upon one of which the facts might be true and not constitute a crime.⁹⁵ Nor is it sufficient to follow the language of the statute where there has been a misprint in the statute,⁹⁶ or where in so stating the offense, the charge would be made only by inference or argument,⁹⁷ or would amount only to a statement of a conclusion of law.⁹⁸ But if in any case, where it is not otherwise apparent, the defendant insists upon greater particularity than the language of the statute, it is for him to show that from the obvious intention of the legislature, or the known principles of law, the case falls within some exception to the general rule.¹

which shall constitute it are not specified, but, from the general language used, many things may be done which may constitute an offense, it is then necessary to set forth the particular things or acts claimed to have been done, with reasonable clearness and distinctness;³ and, on the other hand, the rule is the same where several separate different and distinct acts are enumerated in the statute, any one of which may constitute the crime.⁴ So where the offense is described by general words in the statute, and really consists in a number of particulars, to follow the exact language of the statute is not sufficient.⁵ And where the definition of the offense includes generic terms, it is not sufficient to charge the offense in the same generic terms as in the definition, but it must state the species; it must descend to particulars.⁶

The law would be the same in an indictment for profane cursing and swearing. It would not be sufficient to charge a party with having profanely sworn so many oaths, as a profane oath is a matter of law, depending upon the particular words used, and therefore not to be decided by the witness but by the court." *Brittin v. [a] "In such a case an information using the same generic terms of the statutory definition is insufficient as stating a conclusion. It must be more specific than the statute, and state such particulars as will bring the act

Where the statute uses generic terms whose meaning is limited by an enumeration of particular prohibited acts, it is not sufficient merely to charge the offense in the generic terms.⁷ When a general term, used in a statute creating an offense is followed by words of more precise and definite meaning, the indictment must charge the offense in the particular words used in the statute.⁸ Statutes, however, sometimes provide that when a statute creating or defining any offense uses special or particular terms, an indictment on it may use the general term, which in common language, embraces the special term.⁹

(3.) Statute in Disjunctive.—A further exception to the general rule that it is ordinarily sufficient in framing an indictment upon a statute, to use the very words of the statute,¹⁰ exists where a statute defining an offense enumerates several acts disjunctively as constituting the offense; in which case if it is sought to charge more than one of such acts in the same count, the conjunctive must ordinarily be used.¹¹

[b] "For example, the statutory offense of obtaining money or property upon 'false pretenses' would not be sufficiently charged in the language of the statute; for 'false pretenses' is a generic term, which includes an innumerable variety of acts and conduct. There is nothing of a generic nature about the statutory definition of the crime of 'living with a common prostitute.'" State v. King, 35 Nev. 153, 126 Pac. 880.

[c] An exception to this rule exists where the offense of sodomy is statutory, in which case it is sufficient to charge it in the language of the statute, without describing the particular manner or the details of the commission of the act. *Glover v. where the acts are not repugnant,¹² since alternative or disjunctive averments render an indictment bad for uncertainty.¹³ This rule, however, does not apply where the use of the disjunctive "or" does not render the statement of the offense uncertain,¹⁴ as where one term is used only as explaining or illustrating the other,¹⁵ or as synonymous with it,¹⁶ or where the language of the law makes either an attempt or procurement of an act, or the act itself, in the alternative, indictable.¹⁷

[a] In State v. Flint, 62 Mo. 393, the court said: "The statute is in the disjunctive, and makes the act criminal when done in one or the other of different ways. The indictment follows the language of the statute, but charges the offense to have been committed conjunctively. This ordinarily is correct and proper pleading. Where a statute on which an indictment is founded, enumerates the offense or the intent necessary to constitute such offenses disjunctively, the indictment must charge them conjunctively where the acts are not repugnant. (State v. Fitzsimmons, 30 Mo. 236.) Where the contradictory or repugnant expressions do not enter into the substance of the offense, and the indictment will be good without them, they may be rejected as surplusage; or, where the repugnant matter is simply inconsistent with any preceding averments, it may also be rejected as superfluous."

should show that the act sought to be charged as constituting an offense is not one of the cases thus excluded.²⁰ Nor is it sufficient to follow the language of the statute where the statute shows that it was intended against wilful and intentional acts only, though not in terms so alleged.²¹

(IV.) Matters in Addition to Statutory Language. — Notwithstanding the rule permitted a statutory offense to be pleaded in the language of the statute,²² yet in charging such offenses, as in charging offenses at common law,²³ it is necessary that the indictment should leave no doubt in the minds of the accused and the court of the exact offense intended to be charged, so that the defendant may not only know what he is called upon to meet, but also that a plea of formal acquittal or conviction can be shown with accuracy by the record.²⁴ So too, in addition to the statutory language, the indictment should in some way individualize the particular offense charged, by appropriate averments as to time, place, person and other circumstances to identify the particular transaction.²⁵

(V.) Negating Provisos and Exceptions. — The rule is sometimes stated that if the exception or proviso is incorporated in the enacting clause, it is an essential part of the offense, and the indictment must negative the fact that the defendant comes within the exception or proviso,⁴⁵ but where the exception is in a subsequent section or statute, to allege the facts even under an indictment following the language of the statute or as to show that the act of the defendant which the prosecution proposes to prove was an act forbidden by the statute, it is enough if the indictment individuates the offense, and states the material facts constituting it. If every element of the crime, as described in the statute, is charged in the indictment, it is sufficient. State v. Lousman, 137 Iowa 191, 114 N. W. 1932.

[b] "The rule that in describing an offense it is sufficient to use the words of the statute creating it is greatly misapplied and perverted . . . No one ever supposed that it meant to sanction an indictment charging one generally with the offence specified in the statute, without containing any particular act showing that the general provision has been violated. The rule means that the act, charged in the indictment as violating the general law, must be described by the words of the statute . . . The objection to this indictment is that it charges no particular act showing by its description in the words of the act that the general provision has been violated." State v. Cox, 29 Mo. 475, followed in State v. Gibbs, 129 Mo. App. 700, 108 S. W. 588; State v. Sills, 56 Mo. App. 408; State v. Ryan, 30 Mo. App. 159.

[a] In State v. Paris, 119 Ind. 446, 191 N. E. 497, the court said: "It is well established in this state that an indictment need negative only those exceptions which are closely connected with the creating clause or in the same clause that creates the offense. Where the exception comes by way of proviso or is contained in a different section of the statute it is not necessary guide in criminal pleading,²⁷ it is not an accurate statement,²⁸ as the rule does not depend upon the place which the proviso or exception occupies in the statute, but upon its nature.²⁹ Neither does the question depend upon any distinction between the words "provided" or "excepted" as they may be used in the statute.³⁰ to show by negative averment that the defendant was not within the exception, but the exception in such case is a mere matter of defense."

[b] Under a statute making it an offense to convey liquor, except the conveyance of a lawful purchase as provided in the act, the indictment need not negative such exception. Schave v. State, 4 Okla. Crim. 285, 111 Pac. 922. See also State v. Weller, 171 Ind. 53, 85 N. E. 761, and the title "Intoxicating Liquors."

[c] This rule is especially applicable to affidavits or complaints made before inferior judicial officers in which that particularity required to be observed in indictments is dispensed with. Hyde v. State, 155 Ala. 133, 46 So. 489.

[a] "This rule, it is well said, will frequently hold good and prove a safe guide in pleading, but is not a universal criterion; as the words defining the offense may be so entirely separable from the exceptions, though contained in the same clause, that all the ingredients of the offense may be clearly and accurately alleged without reference to the exception; whereas cases have arisen where the exception, though in a subsequent clause or section, was nevertheless so incorporated as an amendment with the words previously employed in defining the offense, as to render it impossible to frame the actual statutory charge in the indictment, without alleging the accused was not within the exception contained in the subsequent clause, section or statute." *State v. [a] "Commentators and judges have sometimes been led into error by supposing that the words 'enacting clause,' as frequently employed, mean the section of the statute defining the offense, as contradistinguished from a subsequent section in the same statute, which is a misapprehension of the term, as the only real question in the case is whether the exception is so incorporated with the substance of the clause defining the offense as to constitute a material part of the description of the acts, omissions, or other ingredients which constitute the offense. Such an offense must be accurately and clearly described, and if the exception is so incorporated with the clause describing the offense that it becomes in fact a part of the description, then it cannot be omitted in the pleading, but if it is not so incorporated with the clause defining the offense as to become a material part of the definition of the offense, then it is matter of defense and must be shown by the other party, though it be in the same section or even in the succeeding sentence." *United States v. The question is, is the exception so incorporated with the substance of the clause defining the offense as to constitute a material part of the description of the acts, omissions, or other ingredients which constitute the offense.¹¹ If it is so incorporated, whether it be contained in the clause creating the offense, or in a subsequent clause, or statute, it must be negatived,¹² but if the language of the section defining the offense is so entirely separable from the exception that the ingredients constituting the offense may be accurately and clearly defined without ception within the rule. The words "unless," "other than," "not being," "not having," etc., have the same legal effect, and require the same form of pleading. Com. v. Hart, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 130.

need not be negative unless necessary to a complete definition of the offense.³⁴ The practical test is, does the statute declare the criminality of the prohibited acts as an entire class, or such acts only when committed by designated persons, or under particular circumstances or during a specified period.³⁵ If it be clear that an act is only to become a crime when executed by persons of a particular class, or under particular conditions, then this class, or these conditions, must be set out in the indictment, no matter in what part of the statute they may be expressed.³⁶

If the proviso is the statement of an exception, not qualifying the offense, but simply exempting certain specified acts and designated persons from the operation of the statute, it need not be negatived in the indictment, as it constitutes no part of the description of the offense.³⁷ A bare negative qualification, not entering into the gist of the charge need not be averred; it must be relied upon as matter of defense.³⁸

An exception which is not contained in the statute at all, but is made by reason of a constitutional provision, need not be negatived.³⁹

When there are several species of the same general crime with more or fewer circumstances of aggravation and they are subject to a gradation of punishment, it is not necessary in pleading to negative such circumstances.⁴⁰ Exceptions, relating to the evidence on the

39. State v. Jenkins, 124 Md. 376, 92 Atl. 773; State v. Carruth, 85 Vt. 271, 81 Atl. 922.

[a] The mere fact that an exception is created by a constitutional provision, instead of by statute, does not determine that the exception must be negatived. State v. Carruth, 85 Vt. 271, 81 Atl. 922.

[b] Thus, an indictment is not invalid because it does not negative an exception to the statute which is made by reason of a provision in the federal constitution. State v. Jenkins, 124 Md. 376, 92 Atl. 773.

[c] "An indictment in the state courts, regards only the law of the state against which the offense is committed. It is not necessary to negative possible and contingent defenses which may arise under the statutes of the United States, or under its treaties with other governments. The party justifying under such acts or treaties, must bring forward in his defense the facts necessary to make out his justification. State v. Gurnee, 37 Maine 149." *State v. trial, need not be negatived in the indictment.⁴³ If a single statute creates several offenses, and only of which is charged, facts pertinent to the other statutory offenses need not be negatived.⁴⁴ But if the statute contains several provisos and exceptions requiring negation, the indictment must negative each and all of the provisos or exceptions.⁴⁵

Statutes in some states have dispensed with the necessity of negating statutory exceptions, and they are upheld as a proper exercise of legislative power,⁴⁶ but a statute providing that no indictment shall be deemed invalid for want of an averment of matter not necessary to be proved does not dispense with the necessity of negating exceptions constituting an essential element in the description of the offense.⁴⁷

Sufficiency of Negation.—Where a negative averment is required it need not be as minute or so nearly in the statutory words as must an affirmative one,⁴⁸ but it must be as broad as the exception or proviso is.⁴⁹ The exception may be negatived by placing the word "not" before it, though such exception contains an affirmative limited by a ception providing less severe penalty for burning buildings not constituting a dwelling house or its out buildings.

held to be cured by a statute providing that "no indictment shall be deemed invalid or . . . be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matters of form . . . which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant," on the ground that such an averment was not necessary to be proved by the state and was therefore merely formal. *Ploming v. negative, and thus causes a double negative.⁴⁸ There is no necessity that the exact words of the statute be adopted; whatever amounts to a substantial negative is sufficient,⁴⁹ and if the allegations of the indictment upon the affirmative part of the statute necessarily involve a negative of the proviso or exception, it is sufficient.⁵⁰

If the statute makes certain acts criminal and specifies several exceptions disjunctively, the indictment should not state the exceptions conjunctively where the result of such allegation is to change the offense.⁵¹

F. CO-DEFENDANTS, ACCESSORIES, AND PRINCIPALS IN SECOND DEGREE.

1. Co-defendants.⁵²—An indictment or information against two or more persons jointly must charge a joint offense.⁵³ But it is not necessary, as a rule, to aver expressly that they acted together in the commission of the offense sought to be charged.⁵⁴ Nor need the particular

[a] Two persons cannot be convicted of distinct and independent offenses, upon an indictment which charges an offense as committed jointly. In order to convict both, a joint offense must be proved. Ball v. State, 67 Miss. 358, 7 So. 353.

[a] "It is not necessary to the charge of a joint assault by several persons, that they be specifically charged as acting 'together and with each other.'" Polen v. United States, 41 App. Cas. (D. C.) 4.

[b] There is no partnership in crime. (1) and it is not necessary to allege that several committed an offense as partners. State v. Gay, 10 Mo. 410.

act which each did towards the consummation of the offense be set forth.⁵⁰ Nor if set forth, does an apparent impossibility therein vitiate the indictment.⁵¹

Where two or more persons are charged jointly, the indictment need not contain a count charging them each separately with the commission of the offense.⁵² It does not constitute a misjoinder to do so, however.⁵³ Their names need not be connected with the conjunction "and" where charged jointly in same count, if separated by commas.⁵⁴

Where several persons acting together are necessary to consummate an offense, an indictment against less than such number, though speaking of several other persons, is not sufficient, where such other persons are neither named nor charged to be unknown.⁵⁵

2. Accessories and Accomplices.—The manner of charging accessories is fully treated elsewhere in this work.⁵⁶

(2) Especially is it unnecessary to allege a partnership between defendants, where the parties may be joint principals and joint offenders without being partners. Janks v. State, 29 Tex. App. 234, 15 S. W. 815.

[c] An indictment which charges that the two accused persons, naming them, "did willfully, feloniously, and of their malice aforethought kill and murder," etc., is sufficient. State v. Johnson, 104 La. 417, 29 So. 24, holding also that it is neither necessary, nor preferable as a matter of concise expression to use the word "defendants," or "as defendants" immediately preceding the words, "did willfully, feloniously, etc."

[d] Where it was alleged in the indictment that the defendants made the false and fraudulent representations therein alleged, this was deemed an allegation that each of the defendants made such representations, and sufficient as to each. People v. Jefferey, 82 Hun 409, 91 N. Y. Supp. 207.

[e] Surplusage.—Such allegations, when made, is surplusage. Louglas v. State, 32 Tex. crim. 368, 24 S. W. 408; Finney v. State, 39 Tex. App. 184, 16 S. W. 175; Walton v. State, 28 Tex. App. 34, 12 S. W. 404; Gay v. State, 3 Tex. App. 168.

58. Where A and B are charged with embezzlement in one count, and in another count A is charged with the same act of embezzlement, this is not a misjoinder; but the latter count is mere surplusage, being embraced in the other. State v. Harris, 106 N. C. 682, 11 S. E. 377.

3. Principals in Second Degree.—Where, in cases of felony, several are present aiding and abetting therein, they may be joined with the principal in the first degree,⁶² and charged in the indictment, either as actual perpetrators, or as aiders and abettors.⁶³ But an indictment against a principal in the second degree need not describe him as such in express terms.⁶⁴ Nor is it necessary to set forth the manner or means by which he became thus guilty.⁶⁵ Nor where the acts constituting the crime charged are sufficiently stated with reference to the principal in the first degree, need they be repeated in charging one in the same indictment as a principal in the second degree.⁶⁶

If, however, instead of proceeding under a general indictment, the prosecution proceeds under a bill, charging each of the defendants with the particular acts done, or part performed by them respectively, should the facts alleged as to some of them be insufficient to show their guilt, the indictment as to them would be bad.⁶⁷ And if one cannot be

63. Maughon v. State, 9 Ga. App. 559, 71 S. E. 922; State v. White, 7 La. Ann. 531.

[a] "Where A and B are present, and A commits an offense in which B aids and abets him, the indictment may either allege the matter according to the facts, or charge them both as principals in the first degree, for the act of one is the act of the other, and upon such indictment B, who was present, aiding and abetting, may be convicted, though A is acquitted." Maughon v. State, 9 Ga. App. 559, 71 S. E. 922, quoting 1 Stark. on Cr. Pl. (2d ed.) 81.

[K] The better mode is to describe the part which each had in the crime, according to the truth of the facts, as is the usual practice. State v. Rabon, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 299.

64. Millen v. State, 60 Ga. 620.

[a] It is sufficient to charge both principals with the offense, and then allege that one of them perpetrated the crime, and that the other was present, aiding and abetting. Millen v. United States, 60 Ga. 620.

65. State v. White, 7 La. Ann. 531 (sufficient merely to describe him generally as being present, aiding and abetting at the felony committed in murder and force aforesaid); Williams v. State, 42 Tex. 392; Davis v. State, 3 Tex. App. 91.

[a] "It has been repeatedly held that it is not necessary to allege in the indictment the facts relied upon to show the defendant to be a principal, although the offense with which he is charged may not have been actually committed by him. But if he is a principal offender by reason of the part performed by him in the commission of the offense, he may be convicted under an indictment charging him directly with its actual commission." Williams v. State, 42 Tex. 392.

66. Everett v. State, 33 Fla. 661, 15 So. 543.

67. Williams v. State, 42 Tex. 392; Davis v. State, 3 Tex. App. 91.

[a] An indictment intended to charge the accused as an accessory during the fact, in which the offense is stated in the language of the statute, without more, is substantially defective, where the same does not sufficiently show the guilt of the accused. Farrell v. People, 8 Colo. App. 524, 46 Pac. 411, wherein the court said: "The indictment, in merely stating that the defendant, upon the occasion of the robbery, stood by without interfering and without giving such help as was then and therein his power to prevent the commission of the crime, does not charge an offense. He might have possessed power to do something which, under the attendant circumstances, the law would not require him to exercise. The indictment should show what it was in his power to do without placing himself in peril. It should set forth what act he failed to do, which he might have safely done. The general and comprehensive language of the indicted as an aider and abettor until the other is charged with the commission of a felony, an indictment is defective which charges both with an act which but one of them committed, and which fails to designate the particular one who did commit it.⁷⁰

Under statutes dispensing with the distinction between principals in the first degree and in the second degree, an indictment of a principal in the second degree need only aver such facts as are requisite against a principal in the first degree.⁷¹

G. ASSAULTS, ATTEMPTS AND SOLICITATIONS. — 1. Assaults. — The subject of assaults is fully treated elsewhere in this work.⁷²

2. Attempts.⁷³ — Though an indictment for an offense necessarily includes an attempt to commit the offense itself,⁷⁴ it has been said that an indictment for an attempt need not set forth the attempt with as much exactness as is required in an indictment for the commission of the offense itself,⁷⁵ but that greater particularity is required in charging an attempt than in charging an assault with an intent to commit an offense.⁷⁶

An indictment for an attempt must allege both the intent with which the attempted act was done,⁷⁷ and an overt act adapted to produce the effect intended,⁷⁸ and should specify the particular offense charge gave the defendant no information of what case against him the prosecution expected to establish by proof; and in preparing his defense, he had nothing but conjecture to guide him. It is not the form merely of the indictment that is objectionable. The paper is substantially and radically defective, and the failure to take the objection before trial did not waive the defects."

[a] In United States v. Ford, 34 Fed. 20, the court said: "The indefinite nature of the offense, at common law, of an attempt to commit a crime, has induced the enactment of many statutes in England and this country, setting forth, in express terms, what acts shall constitute an attempt to commit the crimes referred to in such statutes. In a case not thus specifically defined, the offense of an attempt to commit a crime, although declared, in general terms, in a statute as a crime, remains as at common law, and its nature is dependent upon its peculiar circumstances, and they must be distinctly alleged in an indictment. The overt acts or words that indicate the intention of the alleged wrongdoer must be considered by the jury, upon the evidence, in determining the essential question—whether such intention was criminal. Everything necessary to be proved must be alleged."

[b] In State v. Frazier, 53 Kan. 87, 36 Pac. 58, 42 Am. St. Rep. 274, the court said: "Under the statute relating to attempts, there must be, first, an intention to commit the crime, and, second, some direct overt act done toward its commission. . . . The second is an essential element of the offense, and should be specifically set forth in the charge. The physical acts done towards the commission of the offense should be stated in the information or indictment, so that the court may see whether or not the law has been violated, and so the accused may know to what he must make answer."

[c] To charge the overt act as "by picking her pocket" is insufficient, being too uncertain and equivocal. State v. Wilson, 30 Conn. 500.

77. State v. Doran, 99 Me. 329, 59 Atl. 440, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278; People v. Kane, 161 N. Y. 380, 55 N. E. 946, affirming 61 N. Y. Supp. 195, 632.

[a] An averment that defendant broke and entered a certain car for the purpose of committing a "felony" is not sufficient. State v. Doran, 99 Me. 329, 59 Atl. 440, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278.

78. State v. Doran, 99 Me. 329, 59 Atl. 440, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278; Com. v. Doherty, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 52; Josslyn v. Com., 6 Mete. (Mass.) 236.

[a] It is ordinarily sufficient to state the intended offense generally (1) as by alleging an intent to steal, or commit the crime of larceny, rape or arson (State v. Doran, 99 Me. 329, 59 Atl. 440, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278), (2) And while the use of words descriptive of the crime as assault, rape and others is sufficient, it was held in State v. Donovan (Del.), 99 Atl. 221, insufficient to allege an "attempt to set on fire" a warehouse, because it did not plainly inform defendant of the nature and cause of the accusation against him.

79. Conn.—State v. Wilson, 30 Conn. 500, not enough to charge an attempt merely. Fla.—Hogan v. State, 50 Fla.

narily sufficient, but under the statutes existing in some states defining an attempt, it is sufficient to allege an attempt to commit an offense in the language of the statute without setting out the particular manner in which the attempt was made.⁸⁰ It is not necessary to allege failure in the attempt.⁸¹ Nor is it necessary to allege directly that the act attempted was a crime punishable by law, provided it appears to be so from the facts alleged.⁸²

3. Solicitations.—Solicitations to commit a crime are punishable as such in some states and an indictment therefor need not allege that the person solicited to commit the offense acceded to the request,⁸³ nor need it show any overt act tending to carry out the crime counseled, other than the solicitation,⁸⁴ but should set forth all the elements of the offense solicited to be committed.⁸⁵

If the attempt to commit an offense is the subject-matter of the

[b] In Hogan v. State, 50 Fla. 86, 39 So. 464, 7 Ann. Cas. 139, the court said: "No overt act is averred in the indictment before us; boiled down it merely alleges that the accused attempted to commit rape by attempting to commit rape. Such an indictment, even under the most liberal construction that obtains under the statute of our state, cannot be upheld; the defect is not one of form but of substance and defendant was not sufficiently advised of the accusation against him."

[a] "The principle upon which an indictment which merely charges an 'attempt' to commit an offense is held good, is, that the word 'attempt' has a legal meaning—is an adjoined word, and, therefore, when a person is indicted for an 'attempt,' he, in law, is as fully advised of what the indictment charges, as if the statute had defined, with precision, the acts necessary to constitute an 'attempt.'" *Jackson v. indictment in order that the solicitation may be relied upon as an overt act, such solicitation must be alleged,⁸⁶ and the solicitation by the defendant and the acts which he actually did in making the attempt may be set forth in the same count.⁸⁷

II. BY MEANS OF SEPARATE COUNTS.—1. Form and Sufficiency

a. In General.—Where an indictment contains several counts, each count is to be treated as a separate charge,⁸⁸ and must be sufficient and complete within itself,⁸⁹ except that for some allegations subsequent counts may refer to the first or former counts.⁹⁰ As the rule is sometimes stated, an allegation in one count cannot aid another count, unless it is incorporated into the other count by reference thereto.⁹¹

Each count must charge the defendant as if he had committed a distinct offense.⁹² It is not necessary, however, to aver the offense described in each of the several counts to be other and different from that described in the others.⁹³ Nor is it necessary that each count

The insufficiency of one count where others therein are good does not vitiate the indictment or information,⁹⁵ and a conviction thereon will be sustained.⁹⁶

[a] In Reg. v. Martin, 9 Car. & P. 215, 38 E. C. L. 135, "an indictment in the first count charged the defendant with having assaulted 'E. R., an infant above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years,' with intent to carnally know and abuse her, and in the second count charged that the defendant 'unlawfully did put and place the private parts of him the said T. M., against the private parts of her the said E. R., and did thereby then and there unlawfully attempt and endeavor to carnally know and abuse the said E. R.'" The offense intended to be charged in the second count was an attempt to have carnal knowledge of a child between ten and twelve years old. But the court decided that the offense was not so charged by the language used, and that the second count was bad for not alleging that E. R. was between the ages of ten and twelve, so as to bring the case within the statute. State v. Lyon, 17 Wis. 245.

[b] Compare Keech v. State, 15 Fla. 591, 603 (wherein the court said: "It is allowed, however, in a second count to refer to persons named in the first count, as 'the said A. B.,' 'the said wife,' etc., thus pointing to the same person named in the first. (Bish. Cr. Proc., §187 and cases cited.) But the only safe rule is to state the offense and the names of persons and places in each count, in all cases where it is deemed necessary to employ more than one statement of the offense"); also *Com. v. "aforesaid,"¹³ the rule being that the words "aforesaid" or "before mentioned" and the like, in a second or subsequent count, may import into it by reference any quality or adjunct of a subject-matter treated of in a prior count, provided such quality or adjunct be inseparable from the subject-matter as necessarily and invariably belonging to it,¹⁴ but not otherwise.¹⁵ holding that "when the first count of an indictment properly charges the larceny of certain specific chattels, alleging the value and ownership thereof, and the second count charges the felonious receiving of 'the said' chattels, enumerating the same, the words 'the said' refer to the first count, and the allegations as to ownership and value set forth in that count are to be read into the second count."

[c] Where the names of the defendant are set forth in the first count, they are clearly referred to in a second count by the use of the words "said defendants." Chapple v. State, 124 Tenn. 105, 135 S. W. 321.

[a] In State v. Wade, 147 Mo. 73, 47 S. W. 1079, the court said: "Though it is well settled that time, place or person may be referred to by the use of the word 'said,' 'aforesaid,' 'same,' etc., yet that this is the limit of such short method of reference; it cannot without more particularity, without express reference to a previous count supply those descriptive averments, which enter into the vitals of the offense. [State v. Wagner, 118 Mo. 626, and cases cited.] Such reference, Bishop says, 'must be so full and distinct as, in effect, to incorporate the matter going before with that in the count wherein it is made.' [1 Bishop New Crim. Proc., §131] Thus, he says by way of illustration, that though the first count charged an assault on 'Father Ricketts, an infant above the age of ten and under the age of twelve years' etc., yet that the second count by the use of the words 'the said Father Ricketts,' did not with such reference carry with it the allegation contained in the first count that Father Ricketts was 'an infant above the age of ten and under the age of twelve years' [State v. Martin & Co. v. P., 215.] So, also, where a first count set out the larceny of goods of a stated value, and ownership, it was adjudged such ownership and value were not incorporated into the second count which charged a receiving of the 'goods aforesaid' [State v. Lyon, 17 Wis. 237.] To same effect is State v. Wagner, 118 Mo. 626, 24 S. W. 219.

[b] Illustrations.—(1) Use of words 'articles aforesaid' not sufficient to incorporate previous recital as to value of such articles. State v. Wagner, 118 Mo. 626, 24 S. W. 219. And see State v. Lyon, 17 Wis. 237, holding that words 'goods and chattels, etc., aforesaid,' did not import into a second count the allegations of the first as regard to the value and ownership of the property. Compare Com. v. Ault, 10 Pa. Super. 651, 658 see statement in note immediately preceding). (2) Nor are the words, "the aforesaid nest cattle," used alone as a description of property in a count in an information charging the offense of receiving stolen property, sufficient for that purpose. State v. Fields, 70 Kan. 391, 78 Pac. 833. (3) And they are likewise insufficient to be incorporated into that count allegations of number, sex, age, color and brands characterizing cattle fully described in the preceding count. State v. Fields, 70 Kan. 391, 78 Pac. 833. (4) But in Peters v. United States, 94 Fed. 127, 3d C. C. A. 105, a subsequent count of an indictment containing several counts averred that a designated person, "having then and there the custody of said association, as aforesaid, did," etc. It was held that the language used could refer to but one person, and to but one association, and necessarily included the entire description of the officer and of the association as set forth in the first count.

Reference to Defective or Dismissed Count.—Though a previous count properly referred to in a subsequent one, be defective,¹⁵ or be for some reason rejected,¹⁶ that will not vitiate the remaining counts, if the reference be sufficiently full to incorporate the matter going before. The same is true in case a nolle prosequi is entered as to such previous count,¹⁷ and even in case of an acquittal of the defendant upon such count.¹⁸

I. INTERPRETATION AND CONSTRUCTION.—1. In General.—While some courts have adopted extremely strict and often highly technical rules for the construction of indictments and informations,¹⁹ the rule of liberal construction has been adopted in many states,²⁰ where crim-

562, 79 E. C. L. 562. In this case, which was an indictment for non-repair of a highway, the first count described the highway by termini, alleged that it was situate in the township of W., and was ruinous, etc. for want of repair, and charged the defendants with liability to repair it. The second count did not directly allege that the way was out of repair, or that it was within the township; but it stated "that the said part of the same highway hereinbefore mentioned to be ruinous," etc., as aforesaid, was repairable by the defendants. It was held that the words "hereinbefore mentioned to be ruinous" did not amount to an averment that it was in fact ruinous; and that the words "same highway hereinbefore mentioned," etc., would not be taken to import that averment from the first count, stating the rule laid down in the text. It was held, however, that by such rule, the words "hereinbefore mentioned" were a sufficient allegation, by reference, that the way alleged to be ruinous was in the township.

[a] Where the words used to describe an offense are commonly used in a sense which does not necessarily import an offense, and they are used without any qualification, the indictment will be bad, though the same words, in a more strict and technical sense, may describe a criminal act. State v. Parker, 43 N. H. 83.

[b] If the sense of any word be in ordinary acceptance ambiguous, (1) it shall be construed according as the context and subject-matter require it to be in order to make the whole consistent and sensible. King v. Stevens, 5 East 244, 102 Eng. Reprint 1063. (2) The word "until" may therefore be construed either exclusive or inclusive of the day to which it is applied, according to the context and subject-matter. King v. Stevens, 5 East 244, 102 Eng. Reprint 1063.

strued,²⁵ a reasonable interpretation of the language employed in stating the offense is always permissible,²⁶ particularly in respect to matters of description or inducement.²⁷ If then the sense of an indictment is clear, nice or technical exceptions thereto will not now, as a rule, be favorably regarded.²⁸

In determining the sufficiency of an indictment, it will be read and considered as a whole,²⁹ and if when so read and considered it substantially conforms to the requirements of the statute in respect to the matters therein pointed out as material and necessary, it will be a good indictment.³⁰ But the courts are not at liberty to depart from the words of the pleading itself and speculate as to the possible intention of the writer.³¹ In the case of ambiguity or uncertainty, the court must apply the rule that the pleading is to be taken most strongly against the pleader.³² If the language used is equally capable of two interpretations, upon one of which the facts might be true and not constitute an offense, then it is insufficient.³³

34. State v. Daniels, 44 N. H. 383.

In determining the antecedent of a pronoun used, the court will be governed by the sense and meaning intended and not refer it arbitrarily to the last preceding noun.³⁵ It must be referred to that antecedent to which the tenor of the instrument and the principles of law require that it should relate, whether according to the rules of syntax or not.³⁶ The same general rule is true in reference to the use of the word "said."³⁷ In other respects also, the court before determining the meaning, will consult sound sense to the disregard of captious objections, and of two otherwise permissible renderings will accept the one sustaining the proceedings.³⁸

Where an indictment or information contains common law phrases and references, these are to be given their common law meaning.³⁹ But indictments where statutory forms have been provided are sui generis and the rules of construction as to indictments at common law are not applicable.⁴⁰

2. Caption as an Aid to.— Though the caption may be looked to in aid of the indictment in some respects,⁴¹ it cannot be referred to by the court to aid in clarifying imperfect or uncertain allegations in the body of the indictment,⁴² since it is neither technically nor substantially a part thereof.⁴³

3. Use of Preliminary Affidavit or Complaint.— The rule is quite generally recognized that an information cannot be aided by reference to the complaint or affidavit upon which it is based.⁴⁴ But the court may, to aid it in deciphering the writing in the information or indictment, have recourse to the complaint or affidavit upon which the same is based.⁴⁵

J. SURPLUSAGE.—1. What Is Surplusage.—a. In General. Surplusage is variously defined as the allegation of unnecessary matter,⁴⁷ or such an averment as may be stricken out and yet leave a sufficient description of the offense.⁴⁸

The rule in regard to the rejection of unnecessary allegations in an indictment or information as surplusage is well defined; the only difficulty arises in its application to specific cases.⁴⁹ Generally, it may be said that if the elements of the offense are set forth,⁵⁰ other matter to the time,⁶⁶ or place of commission of an offense, where time and place are not material,⁶⁴ may be rejected as surplusage. So may conclusions of law, summing up the offense unnecessarily.⁶⁵

Upon the same principle, allegations that the offense is a continuing one, where not such in fact,⁶⁶ or setting out an assault, when an assault is necessarily implied in the offense charged,⁶⁷ or a misdemeanor of the person upon whom the offense was alleged to have been committed appearing in an immaterial part of the pleading,⁶⁸ or the averment, in an information for keeping open on Sunday a place where liquor is sold, that such place was a licensed saloon, where the statute applied to all places,⁶⁹ have all been treated as surplusage.

Likewise words unnecessarily repeated do not affect the validity of an information or indictment,⁷⁰ nor does an averment that the other Christian name of the accused is unknown,⁷¹ since all such allegations may be stricken from the pleading and still leave it legally sufficient.

A whole count may be rejected as surplusage.⁷²

b. Insufficient Charge of Second Offense.—An indictment charging one offense sufficiently is not vitiated by an insufficient averment of another offense, in the same pleading,⁷³ since the latter may be rejected as surplusage, though if both offenses be effectually charged⁷⁴ the pleading may be bad.⁷⁴

c. Repetition or Redundant Matter.—Words unnecessarily repeated,⁷⁵ or redundancy in non-descriptive matter may be rejected as surplusage, and will not vitiate the indictment,⁷⁶ as long as it is not so prolix as in any way to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant.⁷⁷

f. Alternative Allegations.—A disjunctive or alternative charge may sometimes be rejected as surplusage.⁸²

2. What Is Not Surplusage.—a. Matters of Description.—No averment in an indictment can be rejected as surplusage which is descriptive either of the offense or of the manner in which it was committed. All such averments must be proved as laid, or the failure to do so will amount to a variance.⁸³ The rule is sometimes stated that an unnecessary description of an unnecessary fact may be rejected as surplusage,⁸⁴ but an unnecessarily minute description of a necessary fact cannot be so rejected but must be proved as charged.⁸⁵

If the act with which the accused is charged is sufficiently set out, additional allegations as to the manner in which such act was done, although unnecessary, cannot be treated as surplusage.⁸⁶ So the name of the person in whom the property which is the subject of the charge is laid,⁸⁷ or on whom the offense is stated to have been committed,⁸⁸ an unnecessarily minute description of money⁸⁹ or notes in respect to which the offense was committed cannot be rejected as surplusage.⁹⁰ But it is necessary that the averment be descriptive of the identity of that which is legally essential to the charge;⁹¹ otherwise the rule does not apply.⁹²

Statutes in some states expressly provide that surplusage or repugnant allegations shall not vitiate the indictment if it be sufficient to indicate the crime and the person charged;⁹⁸ but such a provision does not authorize the court to go over a pleading and garble it, picking out a word or sentence here and there, or a part of a sentence regardless of the general tenor and scope of the pleading, so as to entirely change its meaning.⁹⁹

K. AFFIDAVIT OR COMPLAINT.—1. In General.—An affidavit or complaint is sometimes used as the basis of a criminal prosecution, particularly in justices' courts and other courts of similar jurisdiction.¹ Moreoften, however, it is used as the basis of an information, upon which the prosecution is had.²

The same general rules governing the charging of an offense in an indictment or information apply, as a rule, in charging an offense triable before a justice of the peace, or a court of similar jurisdiction, upon a complaint or affidavit.³ It is true, the same degree of certainty and

If there is any relaxation of the rule as to magistrates generally, it is as to matters of form only, and not as to matters of substance. The charge, whether in affidavit or indictment, must allege, in some form, with reasonable certainty, every material fact necessary to be proven to procure a conviction—and this includes every fact essentially necessary to a description of the offense." *Hummel v. der some statutes the district or prosecuting attorney is given some discretion in this matter, being confined, however, to the offense or offenses shown on the preliminary hearing,⁷ or if the hearing is waived, to the offense shown by the preliminary affidavit or complaint.⁸

The information must be against the same person or persons⁹ and must be sufficient within itself. The complaint upon which it is based cannot be referred to in order to correct any defect therein.¹⁰ On the other hand, if the complaint or affidavit upon which the information is based is insufficient, the information cannot be sustained.¹¹

Pac. 300, last two cases holding information must be for same offense charged in the complaint and for which the accused was held to answer, or for one embraced or included within it. Wyo.—State v. Boulter, 5 Wyo. 236, 39 Pac. 883.

As to the necessity for basing an information upon a preliminary affidavit or complaint or upon a preliminary examination and commitment, see supra, V; IV, B, 1, b.

[a] "As was said by this court in Davis v. The State, 2 Texas Ct. App. 184, that by the 8th section of the act of 1876 (Acts Fifteenth Legislature, 20), providing the mode of procedure in prosecutions by information, the affidavit is made a most important and fundamental part of the information. 'The information shall be based upon it,' is the language used. It follows that if the information must be based upon the affidavit, then the offense stated in the information must be characterized by, and correspond with, that as stated in the affidavit." Johnson v. State, 4 Tex. App. 594.

[b] "They must agree as to the time and place of the commission of the offense, as well as to the names of the alleged wrongdoer and the injured party, and there must also be a substantial agreement as to the description of the offense intended to be charged." Cole v. State, 11 Tex. App. 67.

[c] In California the information must be based upon the commitment and not upon the preliminary complaint, since the magistrate may hold the accused for any offense shown by the evidence regardless of the averments of the complaint, and the district attorney has no discretion in the matter. People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 76

[d] In Kansas the accused may be held to answer for an offense entirely different from that named on the preliminary complaint, and presumably the information should be for the offense for which he is held to answer. See Redmond v. State, 12 Kan. 172.

8. State v. Jarrett, 46 Kan. 754, 27 Pac. 146.

In complying with such rules, however, the information need not be confined literally to the charge in the affidavit or complaint, or commitment.¹² If the charge in the complaint is substantially the same as that set forth in the information, a plea of a variance between the complaint and the information is unavailing.¹³ The charge in the information or accusation may be more restricted,¹⁴ though it cannot be broader than the affidavit on which it is based,¹⁵ except to comply with the requisites of a good pleading.¹⁶

If the identity of the transaction set forth in the affidavit with that

[a] The information or accusation need not go beyond a recital of the terms of the affidavit, if those terms are so ample and minute that they would suffice in a regular indictment. Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168.

16. Lepusky v. State, 7 Ga. App. 287, 66 S. E. 965; Hunter v. State, 4 Ga. App. 579, 61 S. E. 1130.

[a] "The affidavit and warrant are merely for the purpose of bringing the party before the court. The accusation must frequently be much more specific, in order to present such a valid charge as will meet the requirements of criminal pleading by putting the defendant on notice of the identical charge he is expected to meet, and enable him to prepare to defend against the charge." Lepusky v. State, 7 Ga. App. 287, 66 S. E. 965.

[b] Though the affidavit merely charges a "misdemeanor," the complaint may amplify the description of offense. Crawford v. State, 4 Ga. App. 789, 62 S. E. 501; Hunter v. State, 4 Ga. App. 579, 61 S. E. 1130.

charged in the information or accusation is apparent, the latter will not be quashed though the affidavit does not properly designate or describe the offense charged.¹⁷

A material variance between the complaint or affidavit and the information is fatal to the information.¹⁸ Thus if a different offense be charged in the information than is charged in the complaint, affidavit, or commitment,¹⁹ or if there be a material variance in the description of the manner or means by which the offense attempted to be charged was committed,²⁰ or as to the time or date of its commission,²¹ or the place where

19. Cal.—Ex parte Fowler, 5 Cal. App. 549, 90 Pac. 958. Mich.—See People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215, holding that if objection that information charged different offense from that charged in complaint had been made before plea of not guilty, it would have been fatal to information. Utah.—State v. Potello, 42 Utah 396, 132 Pac. 14.

[a] A different offense is not charged in the information than that set forth in the complaint within the meaning of the rule stated in the text where the information charges matters of aggravation more fully than the complaint. Strickland v. State, 7 Tex. App. 34.

[b] In Cole v. State, 11 Tex. App. 67, (1) it was contended that the information charged an aggravated assault and battery, while the affidavit only charged an aggravated assault. The court said: "As we have seen, the affidavit charges in terms the commission of an aggravated assault, and sets out in connection therewith the circumstances of the assault which constitute the battery,—thus, by striking, beating, etc.—and that the injured person was a female and the assaulting party an adult male. The affidavit charges an aggravated assault, and sets out the circumstances which render the offense an aggravated assault and battery, agreeably to article 495, Penal Code. In our opinion the affidavit forms a sufficient support for the information for an aggravated assault and battery committed by an adult male on the person of a female, and the court did not err in overruling the motion to quash." (2) But in Davis v. State, 2 Tex. App. 184, wherein the information charged the accused with an aggravated assault and battery, while the affidavit charged an assault with an intent to murder, it was held that the variance was fatal.

[c] Though a complaint charges murder and a preliminary examination is had for such offense, the information may charge manslaughter, such latter offense being lesser in degree and necessarily included in the former. People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 26 N. W. 291.

[d] A complaint charging a felony cannot serve as the basis or predicate for an information for a misdemeanor, and the latter will be bad in case it is attempted to so vary the offense. Kinley v. State, 29 Tex. App. 532, 16 S. W. 339.

As to waiver of objections, see infra, XV.

20. Smith v. State, 57 Tex. Crim. 609, 124 S. W. 665 (wherein complaint charged an assault with "a knife and with a chair" and information charged one with "fists and a chair," and it was held that the variance was fatal); Ferguson v. State, 4 Tex. App. 156, information failing to describe instrument or weapon with which the assault is made substantially as it is done in affidavit fatally defective.

App. 485 (wherein information alleged date of commission of offense as on May 1, 1877, whereas the affidavit charged it as upon May 7, 1877); Brewer v. State, 5 Tex. App. 248; Collins v. State, 5 Tex. App. 37; Hoerr v. State, 4 Tex. App. 75.

[a] Where an information charged that the defendant lived in open and notorious fornication between certain dates specified, including a month before and a month after the time charged in the affidavit, it was nevertheless held upon motion in arrest of judgment that the information was sufficient. State v. Record, 16 Ind. 111, wherein the court said that: "Whatever might be the effect of the discrepancy between the affidavit and information on a motion to quash, we are satisfied that it was not sufficient ground for arresting the judgment."

[b] Where the information is not confined strictly to the affidavit or complaint, but may be based partly upon the facts as brought out upon the preliminary examination, it is permissible to fix the date by the date shown on the examination, though it vary slightly from that stated in the complaint. People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622, 63 S. W. 765.

[c] On or About.—(1) There is no fatal variance between an information charging the commission of the offense on a given date and a complaint charging its commission on or about such date. People v. Flock, 109 Mich. 512, 59 S. W. 737; Whitley v. State (Tex. Crim.), 66 S. W. 69; Dyer v. State (Tex. Crim.), 59 S. W. 67. (2) There is a fatal variance, however, between an information alleging the commission of an offense on a designated date and an affidavit alleging its commission on or about a totally different date. Hoerr v. State, 4 Tex. App. 75.

[d] Continuing Offenses.—Where an information charges the commission of an offense on a day certain, and on divers other days and times between that day and a previous day specified, it being a continuous offense, it is not invalidated by the fact that the complaint charged the offense as having been committed upon the particular day only. People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46, 67 N. W. 1099.

22. Where an information described a church into which it was alleged that a shot was fired by the accused as "St. Paul Church," whereas the complaint described it as the "St. Paul Methodist Church," the variance was fatal. Landrum v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. 666, 40 S. W. 737.

[a] Where no venue is alleged in the affidavit, an information based thereon is invalid, though it states the venue. Rice v. State, 15 Ind. App. 427, 44 N. E. 319; Smith v. State, 3 Tex. App. 549, wherein the court said: "The information is, and must be, based upon the complaint; and, if the complaint is fatally defective, it follows that the information cannot stand."

23. Calvert v. State, 8 Tex. App. 538.

As to necessity for averments as to ownership of property, see supra, IX, E, 4.

[a] Possession.—Where the information does not follow or correspond with the affidavit as to the person from whose possession certain property was stolen, but alleges that it was stolen from the possession of another and different person from the one alleged in the affidavit, the variance is fatal. Johnson v. State, 4 Tex. App. 594.

persons charged,²⁴ or other persons involved therein,²⁵ it is fatal to the information.

An immaterial variance, however, between such instruments, will not render the information fatally defective.²⁶ Thus, where matter in

25. Where, in a prosecution for unlawfully riding on a train, the complaint charged the riding upon a train upon the G. H. & S. A. Ry. Co., while the information charged the riding upon a train upon the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company, the variance was held fatal. Cardenas v. State, 58 Tex. Crim. 109, 124 S. W. 953.

26. See the following: People v. Bianchino, 5 Cal. App. 633, 91 Pac. 112 (mere mistake in date of offense); Germany v. State, 62 Tex. Crim. 276, 137 S. W. 132, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 477 (variance between name of person signing complaint and recital in information as to such person not fatal); Luna v. State (Tex. Crim.), 70 S. W. 89 (variance in name "Colster" and "Colsten" immaterial); Shinner v. State (Tex. Crim.), 65 S. W. 1073; Howard v. State (Tex. Crim.), 65 S. W. 519; Hardy v. State (Tex. App.), 13 S. W. 1008; Roberson v. State, 10 Tex. App. 317.

[d] Where a complaint charged "that the defendant did unlawfully keep and exhibit, for the purpose of gaming, a gaming table and bank," whereas the information charged that he "did unlawfully exhibit for the purpose of gaming a gaming table and bank," there was no material variance due to the omission of the word "keep." Baker v. State (Tex. Crim.), 36 S. W. 659.

[b] Variance between averments, of matter not constituent element of offense, as contained in original complaint and the information, is not fatal. Weatherholt v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. 161, 131 Pac. 155.

tending to be a deputy sheriff alleges that the accused did "unlawfully, willfully, and falsely assume and pretend," etc., while the information only alleges that he did "unlawfully and falsely assume and pretend," etc., omitting the word "willfully," a fatal variance is not created, for which the judgment should be arrested, since it was not necessary for either to charge that the act was wilfully done in order to constitute the offense. Brown v. State (Tex. Crim.), 170 S. W. 714.

[d] Addition of Name Under Alias. The fact that in the affidavit the defendant, besides his name, has an alias added, while in the information, the alias is omitted, does not constitute a fatal variance. Harrison v. State, 6 Tex. App. 256.

[e] Errors in Spelling.—Though the affidavit charges the defendant with the theft of seventy "ears of corn," and the information with seventy "years of corn," the variance is not fatal, since bad spelling, verbal or grammatical inaccuracies, which do not affect the sense, are not fatal to an indictment or information. Stinson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 31. As to effect of errors in spelling, etc., see supra, IX, C, 2, c.

Price*, 143 Cal. 351, 77 Pac. 73 (as to place where burglary committed where it appears same house was attempted to be described in both complaint and information); People v. Selfert, 14 Cal. App. 102, 111 Pac. 270. Mo.—State v. Nave, 185 Mo. 125, 84 S. W. 1. N. D.—State v. O'Neal, 19 N. D. 426, 124 N. W. 68. Okla.—Weatherholt v. State, 9 Okla. Crim. 161, 131 Pac. 155. the information may be rejected as surplusage, a variance as to such matter is immaterial and does not vitiate the information.²⁷

3. Necessity of Indictment Following Complaint or Information.²⁸ Where an indictment is founded upon a previous complaint or information, charges not included therein cannot be included in the indictment, without the official sanction of the prosecuting officer.²⁹

A bill of indictment sent to the grand jury by the prosecuting officer upon his official responsibility and by leave of court, however, cannot be quashed because the offense charged therein does not conform to that set forth in the original information.³⁰ Nor need the indictment in any case conform precisely with the phraseology of the information,³¹ provided the offense charged is the same in substance.³² The fact that the information does not contain as full and specific a statement of the offense as does the indictment, furnishes no ground for quashing the latter.³³

[a] Though an affidavit charged a perjury to have been at the trial of a cause on the 26th of September, 1892, while the information charged that the cause, at the trial of which the perjury was committed, was pending on the 26th of September, 1889, and that the perjury was committed on the 26th of September, 1892, the information was held not to be invalid as against the objection of repugnancy between the affidavit and information, since the first date mentioned in the information might be omitted as surplusage, even were it repugnant to the fact alleged in connection with the second date. *Smith v. [a] Where the offense does not wholly arise from the joint act of the defendants but from some act joined with some personal and particular defect or omission without which it would be no offense, the indictment must charge the defendants severally and not jointly. C. RIGHT TO CONVICT LESSER NUMBER WHERE SEVERAL JOINTED. Offenses though committed jointly are in law several, and an indictment which charges that two or more persons committed a crime is equivalent to a charge that each committed it,⁴⁰ so that under a joint indictment some of the defendants may be convicted while others are acquitted,⁴¹ or found guilty of different offenses,⁴² except where because of the nature of the offense one cannot be convicted without the other.⁴³

XI. JOINDER OF OFFENSES. — A. DUPLICITY. — 1. General Rule. — In order to prevent useless prolixity and confusion in pleading and the multiplication of issues⁴⁴ subject to the qualifications and exceptions hereinafter stated,⁴⁵ the criminal law does not permit two or more distinct and substantive offenses to be joined in the same count of an indictment or information, as such joinder would render the indictment or information duplicitous,⁴⁶ though statutes sometimes permit such joinder in certain enumerated cases.⁵³

Some statutes provide that offenses of the same character and subject to the same punishment may be charged in the same count in the alternative,⁵⁴ but this does not permit the charging of separate and distinct offenses in a single count.⁵⁵ It is improper to charge in the same count a felony and a misdemeanor.⁵⁶

Neither an involved and complicated statement of the offense

[c] Confusion and Uncertainty.—To render the indictment liable to the objection of implety, it must be such as to produce confusion and uncertainty as to what offense was really intended to be charged. State v. Smith, 24 Tex. 282; Beaumont v. State, 1 Tex. App. 595, 28 Am. Rep. 423.

[d] Duplicity Is Only a Fault in Form.—Sprouse v. Com., 81 Va. 274.

[e] "It is only when it appears by the indictment itself (1) that two or more distinct acts are involved in the commission of two or more crimes charged that an indictment or count therein charging two or more offenses is bad for duplicity. Carroll v. State, 104 Wis. 227, 232, 80 N. W. 143; Vogel v. State, 128 Wis. 216, 110 N. W. 108." State v. Heiber, 123 Wis. 316, 221 N. W. 128, (2) But, though the indictment is not defective on its face, if the proof offered to support it shows that two separate and distinct offenses were charged the defendant cannot be convicted of either, for he is not guilty as charged in the indictment. Thomas v. State, 111 Ala. 51, 20 So. 617.

[f] A substantive offense is one which is complete of itself, and is not dependent upon another. State v. Smith, 21 Mo. 340.

[h] Whether or not offenses are to be treated as distinct offenses depends upon whether or not they are embraced within the same general definition and punishable in the same manner. If they are, then they are not distinct offenses, and may be charged in a single count of the same indictment. Nicholas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 217, 18 S. W. 439, 249. See also State v. [b] Illustrations.—An accused might be charged with selling different kinds of liquor contrary to law; the sale of each kind would be an indictable offense, yet an indictment setting forth in one count the different acts toward the perpetration of the offense, the completed offense merging all precedent acts."

4. Continuing Offenses.—When the offense charged consists of a series of acts which are not in themselves separate and distinct wrongs,⁶⁷ the fact that it is laid under a continuando, that is, that the indictment or information recites in the charging part the occurrence of such acts at different times, does not render the pleading bad for duplicity.⁶⁸ But on the other hand if the offense is not of a continuing a violation of the law in selling all could not be said to charge several distinct offenses. A man may be indicted for the battery of two or more persons in the same count, yet the battery of each was an offense; yet they may be charged together, because they are but parts of one order—or the offense against the commonwealth being the breach of the peace. Or a libel upon two or more persons, when the publication is one single act, may be charged in one count without rendering it bad for duplicity; or in robbery, with having assaulted two persons, and stolen from one one sum of money, and from the other a different sum of money, if it was all one transaction. Sprague v. Conn., 81 Va. 374.

[c] Obtaining goods from one person by the same false pretense twice repeated on different days is but one transaction and therefore but one offense. Boakey v. State, 59 Ala. 20.

[d] The running of six freight trains on Sunday was in Westfall v. State, 4 Ga. App. 824, 62 S. E. 528, held well treated as one offense and chargeable in one count.

[e] Escape.—(1) An indictment charging in one count aiding a prisoner to escape from the custody of an officer, when such prisoner was under arrest for a felony and a misdemeanor, is duplicitous where the statute makes aiding a prisoner charged with felony, to escape, a felony, but otherwise only a misdemeanor. State v. Harrison, 62 Mo. App. 322. (2) But an indictment charging the aiding of two persons to escape from jail where one was charged with a capital crime and the other for a lesser offense is not duplicitous and notwithstanding a statute provides a heavier penalty for aiding a person charged with a capital offense in escape. *Illiana v. character, and the indictment charges the commission of certain acts with a continuando, it is objectionable for duplicity.⁷⁰

Thus, in accordance with the general rule, where the offense charged consists in retailing liquors "at divers times, to divers persons" but a single offense is charged, the retailing of liquors.⁷¹ The statute, however, may make each sale of liquor a separate wrong, in which case the indictment must charge each sale separately or be bad for duplicity,⁷² though in some jurisdictions where one sale is sufficiently charged, allegations in the nature of a continuando will not affect the validity of the pleading.⁷³

To charge the defendant with cruelty to animals, extending over a considerable period of time, is to charge him with but a single offense.⁷⁴ So, also, when the offense is embezzlement the charging of several acts of the same character which, taken as a whole, constitute the crime charged,⁷⁵ or in the case of keeping a gaming house, charging that it was kept on divers days,⁷⁶ does not make the pleading duplicitous.

5. Series of Acts Which Singly or Together Constitute Offense.

a. In General.—When a statute denounces a series of acts, either of which separately, or all together may constitute the offense, all of such acts may be charged in a single count, for the reason that, notwithstanding each act may by itself constitute the offense, all of them together do no more and likewise constitute but one offense.⁷⁷ Or where

[a] While as a matter of public policy by statute each act has been individualized and made to amount to the full and complete offense, the statute has not changed and could not change the nature of the acts as possible parts of the same transaction. Com. v. Mentzer, 162 Pa. 646, 29 Atl. 720.

[b] Where an offense is charged in the language of the statute, and the statute enumerates but a single offense, although the conjunctive is used, the indictment states but a single offense. People v. Paquin, 74 Mich. 34, 41 N. W. 852.

[c] Although the indictment or information contains different dates for the different acts, if the subsequent act is but a continuation of the previous one, the rule still applies. People v. Leyshon, 108 Cal. 440, 41 Pac. 480, forging note on one day and uttering it on another.

[c] Where a statute makes it a crime to do this or that, or the other, mentioning several things disjunctively, all of which are punished alike, it is a general rule that the whole may be charged conjunctively in a single count, as constituting but a single offense.⁷⁹ Clifford v. State, 29 Wis. 327. See also: Colo.—Kingsbury v. People, 44 Colo. 403, 99 Pac. 61. Miss.—Coleman v. State, 94 Miss. 860, 48 So. 181. Neb.—Union Pacific R. Co. v. State, 88 Neb. 547, 130 N. W. 277, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 936.

[b] Stating the successive gradations of statutory offenses, conjunctively when they are not repugnant is allowed. State v. Pryor, 53 Kan. 657, 37 Pac. 169.

[c] Where the statute makes indictable two or more distinct acts connected with the same transaction each of which may be considered as representing a phase of the same event, they may be coupled in the same count. Ga.—Wingard v. State, 13 Ga. 396. Mass.—Com. v. Tobias, 141 Mass. 129, 6 N. E. 217. Miss.—Lea v. State, 64 Miss. 201, 1 So. 51; Murphy v. State, 28 Miss. 637. Pa.—*Com. v. [d] That the charge seems to describe the crime under several sections of the code which define the one crime is no different than it would be where a number of different acts are described in a single section. People v. Fisher, 16 Cal. App. 271, 116 Pac. 688.

[a] If the repugnant expression does not enter into the substance of the offense, and the indictment would be good without it, the repugnant expression will be rejected as surplusage. State v. Flint, 62 Mo. 393, 397.

[b] Repugnancy in the case of charging an offense by different means, exists where the proof of the commission by one of the means disproves the other. State v. Pettit, 74 Wash. 510, 123 Pac. 1014.

offense in the several different ways," or upon or with respect to the various things or properties enumerated disjunctively in the statute." Likewise where the statute enumerates disjunctively the different intents necessary to constitute the different offenses named, the intents, following the general rule, may be charged cumulatively," unless the different intents mentioned in the statute, render the defendant subject to different punishments.⁸¹

Where, however, the statute makes the offenses therein described, apparently as distinct and independent as if it had been enacted in separate sections, the different offenses cannot be included in the same count but they should be joined in different counts in such a way as to show that they all relate to the same act and transaction.⁸⁴

6. Insufficient Charge of Second Offense.—a. In General.—To render the indictment bad for duplicity it is necessary that two or more offenses be pleaded in such a manner as to sufficiently charge the commission of both offenses,⁸⁵ for all defective or insufficient charges will be treated as surplusage and rejected,⁸⁶ and if, after all insufficient charges have been thus rejected, there remains but one adequately charged offense, the pleading is not invalidated by their inclusion therein.⁸⁷ However, no offense which is sufficiently alleged can be rejected as surplusage.⁸⁸

b. Incidental Reference to Other Offense.—When the language of the indictment describes another offense, without seeking a conviction thereon,⁸⁹ which offense is referred to merely by way of explanation,⁹⁰

However, in all such cases, if the offense mentioned is itself fully and sufficiently charged, it will render the pleading defective for duplicity.⁹⁵

7. Same Act Affecting Different Persons and Things.—In the case of offenses denominated, by some courts, compound offenses, where in the same transaction more than one offense has been committed, the indictment may in one count charge the several offenses without offending the rule against duplicity.⁹⁶ But if the act or transaction is

[a] Test for Determining Whether Offense Is Single or Double.—To hold the shooting of two mules, to be but one offense it is not requisite that the places be identical and the time be precisely the same, nor that each animal be wounded by the same bullet; but there must be such immediate relation between the two acts of shooting as that the last can be said to be in a train of continuation of the first, actuated by a purpose which is common to both and continuing accompanied by effort to effectuate it from and covering the first act to and embracing the second act, as where a person whose crops are being depredated upon by two mules shoots one of them and immediately pursues the other in broken up by extrinsic action the offenses become distinct and a joinder would render the indictment duplicious.⁸⁷ And if, in the pursuit of a single criminal enterprise, two or more offenses are committed which are independent of each other, both cannot be charged in the same count.⁸⁸ Applying the general rule, however, the offense may be considered single although it affect several persons⁸⁹ or several its flight and shoots it also when he comes up with it. (Busby v. State, 77 Ala. 681, in which the interval of time between the two shootings was such a space as permitted one, walking rapidly, to go about a quarter of a mile,—perhaps three minutes). But where one of the animals is shot at one time and place, and they both then disappear, leaving the premises and the person firing the shot then desists from further effort toward them and returns to his work, and they subsequently are again found in another field, or another part of his field, and he again comes upon them incidentally and shoots the other, the offenses are as distinct as if a day or three days instead of an half hour had intervened.
